Volume X of al-Ṭabari’s massive chronicle is devoted to two main subjects. The first is the selection of Abū Bakr as the first caliph or successor to the Prophet Muḥammad following the Prophet’s death in 632 C.E. This section of the History reveals some of the inner divisions that existed within the early Muslim community and sheds light on the interests and motivations of various parties in the debates that led up to Abū Bakr’s acclamation as caliph.

The second main subject of Volume X is the ṭiddah or “apostasy” —actually a series of rebellions against Muslim domination by various tribes in Arabia that wished to break their ties with Medina following the Prophet’s death. The History offers one of the more extensive collections of accounts about this early sequence of events to be found in the Arabic historical literature. It provides richly detailed information on the rebellions themselves and on the efforts made by Abū Bakr and his Muslim supporters to quell them. It also tells us much about relationships among the tribes of Arabia, local topography, military practice, and the key personnel, organization, and structure of the early Islamic state.

The successful suppression of the ṭiddah marked the transformation of the Muslim state from a small faith community of importance only in West Arabia to a much more powerful political entity, embracing all of the Arabian peninsula and poised to unleash a wave of conquests that would shortly engulf the entire Near East and North Africa. The ṭiddah era is, thus, crucial to understanding the eventual appearance of Islam as a major actor on the stage of world history.
THE HISTORY OF AL-ŢABARĪ
AN ANNOTATED TRANSLATION

VOLUME X

The Conquest of Arabia
The Riddah Wars
A.D. 632–633/A.H. 11
Bibliotheca Persica
Edited by Ehsan Yar-Shater

The History of al-Ṭabarī
(Taʾrīkh al-rusul waʾl mulūk)

VOLUME X
The Conquest of Arabia translated and annotated
by
Fred M. Donner
The University of Chicago

State University of New York Press
THE HISTORY OF PROPHETS AND KINGS (Ta’rikh al-rusul wa’l-mulūk) by Abū Ja’far Muḥammad b. Jarir al-Ṭabarī (839–923), here rendered as the History of al-Ṭabarī, is by common consent the most important universal history produced in the world of Islam. It has been translated here in its entirety for the first time for the benefit of non-Arabists, with historical and philological notes for those interested in the particulars of the text.

Al-Ṭabarī’s monumental work explores the history of the ancient nations, with special emphasis on biblical peoples and prophets, the legendary and factual history of ancient Iran, and, in great detail, the rise of Islam, the life of the Prophet Muḥammad, and the history of the Islamic world down to the year 915. The first volume of this translation contains a biography of al-Ṭabarī and a discussion of the method, scope, and value of his work. It also provides information on some of the technical considerations that have guided the work of the translators.

The History has been divided here into thirty-eight volumes, each of which covers about two hundred pages of the original Arabic text in the Leiden edition. An attempt has been made to draw the dividing lines between the individual volumes in such a way that each is to some degree independent and can be read as such. The page numbers of the Leiden edition appear on the margins of the translated volumes.

Al-Ṭabarī very often quotes his sources verbatim and traces the chain of transmission (isnād) to an original source. The chains of transmitters are, for the sake of brevity, rendered by only a dash (—) between the individual links in the chain. Thus, "According to Ibn Ḫumayd—Salamah—Ibn Isḥāq" means that al-Ṭabarî received the report from Ibn Ḫumayd, who said that he was told by Salamah, who said that he was told by Ibn Isḥāq, and so on. The numerous subtle and important differences in the original Arabic wording have been disregarded.

The table of contents at the beginning of each volume gives a brief survey of the topics dealt with in that particular volume. It also includes the headings and subheadings as they appear in al-Ṭabarî's text, as well as those occasionally introduced by the translator.

Well-known place names, such as, for instance, Mecca, Baghdad, Jerusalem, Damascus, and the Yemen, are given in their English spellings. Less common place names, which are the vast majority, are transliterated. Biblical figures appear in the accepted English spelling. Iranian names are usually transcribed according to their Arabic forms, and the presumed Iranian forms are often discussed in the footnotes.

Technical terms have been translated wherever possible, but some, such as dirham and imām, have been retained in Arabic forms. Others that cannot be translated with sufficient precision have been retained and italicized, as well as footnoted.

The annotation aims chiefly at clarifying difficult passages, identifying individuals and place names, and discussing textual difficulties. Much leeway has been left to the translators to include in the footnotes whatever they consider necessary and helpful.

The bibliographies list all the sources mentioned in the annotation.

The index in each volume contains all the names of persons and places referred to in the text, as well as those mentioned in the notes as far as they refer to the medieval period. It does not include the names of modern scholars. A general index, it is hoped, will appear after all the volumes have been published.

For further details concerning the series and acknowledgments, see Preface to Volume I.

Ehsan Yar-Shater
Contents

Preface / v
Abbreviations / ix
Translator's Foreword / xi

Maps 1. Western Arabia at the Time of the Riddah Wars / xxiv
   2. Eastern Arabia at the Time of the Riddah Wars / xxv

The Events of the Year 11 (cont'd) (632/633) / i What Took Place between the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār over the Matter of Leadership at the Portico of the Banū Sā'īdah / i Remainder of the Account Regarding al-'Anṣi the Liar / 18
   [Abū Bakr’s Letter to the Apostates] / 55
The Remainder of the Account about Ghatafān at the Time of Their Joining with Ṭulayhah and Other Things Relating to the Affair of Ṭulayhah / 60
The Apostasy of Hawāzin, Sulaym, and 'Āmir / 75
Banū Tamīm and the Affair of Sajāh bt. al-Ḥarīth b. Suwayd / 84
Continuation of the Account of Sayf / 96
Al-Butṭāh and Its Story / 98 Remainder of the Story of Musaylimah the Liar and His Tribe of the People of al-Yamāmah / 105
The People of al-Bahrayn, the Apostasy of al-Ḥuṭām, and Those Who Joined With Him in al-Bahrayn / 134
The Apostasy of the People of 'Uman and Mahrah and the Yemen / 151
The Account of Mahrah in the Uplands / 155
Account of the Apostates in the Yemen / 158
The Wicked People of 'Akk / 161
Apostasy of the People of the Yemen a Second Time / 165
The Story of Tahir When He Marched to Reinforce Fayruz / 172
The Account of Ha'dramawt during Their Apostasy / 175
Continuation of the Report of Sayf / 189

Bibliography of Cited Works / 193

Index / 199
Abbreviations

Aghānī: al-Isfahānī, 'Ali b. al-Ḥusayn, Kitāb al-aghānī
B: Berlin Mss. of al-Ṭabarī [nos. 9414–12], used by editors of Leiden edition; Ms. 9416 covers the riddah
BGA: Bibliotheca Geographorum Arabicorum
C: Istanbul ("Constantinople") Ms. Köprüli 1040 of al-Ṭabarī, used by editors of Leiden edition
Cairo: al-Ṭabarī, Ta’rikh, Cairo edition
IK: Possibly a reference to passages in Ibn Khallikān’s Waḥyāt al-a’yān cited by P. De Jong, editor of this section of text in the Leiden edition. In the introduction to the Leiden edition (see Glossary, p. LXIII) Ibn Khallikān is mentioned in the stemma of manuscripts, but no mention of Ibn Khallikān or any other source to which the siglum IK might refer is included in discussion of the manuscripts and sources used by De Jong (pp. LII–LIII).
TAVO: Tübingen Atlas des vorderen Orients, Wiesbaden: Dr. Ludwig Reichert Verlag, 1977–
Text: al-Ṭabarī, Ta’rikh, Leiden edition
Translator's Foreword

This volume of al-Ṭabari's History, corresponding to pages 1837-2016 in the prima series of the Leiden edition, covers only part of the year A.H. 11/A.D. 632-33. It is devoted to two main themes: the saqīfah incident, during which the young Muslim community selected a leader following the death of Muḥammad, and the wars of the riddah or apostasy, during which the first caliph, Abū Bakr, led the government in Medina as it subjected all of Arabia. Some accounts of the saqīfah incident are also found at the end of volume IX of the translation (pp. 1820ff. of the text); on the other hand, all al-Ṭabari's material on the riddah wars is included in volume X, constituting the overwhelming bulk of it.

Both the saqīfah incident and the riddah were crucial events in the development of the early Islamic state. Immediately after the death of the Prophet Muḥammad, the community of Muslims in Medina was in danger of falling apart. Old tribal tensions and rivalries among the Prophet's closest supporters, which the Prophet himself had been able to keep under control by the force of his personality and the authority of his message, threatened to break once again into the open. The Medinan Anṣār, or "Helpers" of the Prophet, and the Muhājirūn, or "Emigrants" who had come with the Prophet from Mecca, had sometimes felt keen rivalry toward one another. Early converts to Islam and old supporters of the Prophet—both Muhājirūn and Anṣār—resented some of the late converts from Mecca, who had been shown great favor by the Prophet in his last years, despite their long and bitter opposition to him and his message. Upon the Prophet's death, some of the leading clans of the Medinan Ansār gathered to plan for their future and were on the verge of selecting one of their number to be leader of the Medinan Muslims, assuming that the Meccan Muslims would choose another chief for themselves. The gathering—which took place on a portico (ṣaqaḥah) of one of the Medinan clans, hence the name of the incident—was visited by a few of Muḥammad's earliest Meccan followers, who pleaded successfully for a unified leadership. The result was the acclamation of Abū Bakr, an early Meccan convert and close confidant of the Prophet, to be the first caliph (khalīfah "successor," sometimes "vicegerent").

In agreeing to recognize Abū Bakr as their leader following the Prophet's death, the Muslims also decided that they were to continue not only as a religious community but also as a unified polity. This decision was of the utmost importance. Had they decided otherwise, it is fair to assume that Islam would never have spread as it did, for the initial Islamic conquest movement was not primarily the expansion of a new faith, but rather the expansion of a new state—albeit a state whose coalescence was intimately linked with the new faith, which would come to be called Islam. It was under the shelter of this state ruled by Muslims that Islam first struck deep roots outside Arabian soil, without this shelter, Islam might well have remained a purely local Arabian cult, very different from what it eventually became as a result of its later evolution in the highly cultured regions of Mesopotamia, Syria, Egypt, and Iran.

If the saqīfah incident can be taken as the moment when Muslims committed themselves to being a unified political community, the riddah wars can be seen as the first test of that commitment. Even as the core of the Muslim community—the Prophet's Meccan and Medinan followers—was deciding to remain under united leadership, many other groups whom the Prophet had brought into his community in various parts of Arabia were deciding to end their submission to Medina. Some tribes claimed that they wished to remain Muslims in the religious sense—by performing prayer, for example—but would not send to Abū Bakr the tax payments that Muḥammad had requested of them in his last years. Others repudiated both the political and the religious leadership of Medina; they wished simply to go their own way, now that the Prophet was dead, in some cases choosing to follow other figures who claimed, like Muhammad, to be prophets (and whom the Muslim tradition, naturally, condemns as "false prophets"). Still others, it seems, hoped simply to take advantage of the turmoil in Medina to raid the town, enriching themselves with plunder and ending what they perhaps felt to be vexatious demands for tribute. All of these movements are termed riddah "apostasy" by the Muslim sources, even in cases where the opponents of Medina showed no desire to repudiate the religious aspects of the faith. Abū Bakr vowed to fight them all until they were subdued and dispatched several armies to deal with the main rebellions. Indeed, the campaigns did not limit themselves to the reconquest of Arabian tribes that had previously had some contact with Muhammad; they spilled over the whole of Arabia, and many tribes and groups that had had no contact with the Prophet at all, and who certainly had not been allied to or subjected by him, were conquered for the first time. The Arabic sources classify these wars, too, as wars against the riddah, even though they involved neither apostasy nor rebellion—only resistance to expansion of the new islamic state based in Medina.¹ The riddah wars constitute, in effect, the first chapter in the early Islamic conquest movement that led to the establishment throughout the Near East of a new imperial state ruled by Arabian Muslims.

The large amount of space that al-Ṭabarî dedicated to the riddah wars reflects the importance accorded the riddah theme in early Islamic historiography. It was a theme closely related to the theme of futūh (conquest by the Islamic state), which dominates the next several volumes in this translation of al-Ṭabarî. Both the riddah and the futūh were seen retrospectively by Muslims as signs of God's favor for the new Islamic faith, which is why they became such central themes in early Islamic historiography. But, unlike the futūh theme, the secondary purpose of which was to explain and justify the Muslims' sovereignty over their non-Muslim subjects, the riddah theme was intended to affirm the superiority of the companions of the Prophet (ṣaḥābah) and of certain tribes and lineages over others.

¹. There are occasional passages where this classification is not enforced, however, e.g., I, 1961 top (from Sayf), which carefully distinguishes "apostates" from "non-apostates who were still unbelievers."

In relating the stories of the saqīfah and the riddah, al-Ṭabarî relied on existing narratives conveyed to him by his predecessors in the historiographical enterprise—above all on the Kūfān compiler Sa'yf b. 'Umar, whose accounts make up about 90 percent of this volume. As in other parts of al-Ṭabarî's history, then, very little in this volume represents original material written by al-Ṭabarî himself. This approach is hardly surprising, for al-Ṭabarî was first and foremost a traditionist and subscribed to the principle that true knowledge was what had been received via sound transmission from reliable earlier authorities, who had been closer to the events described. In the face of such transmitted evidence, al-Ṭabarî would have argued, what could later ideas made without support of sound transmission be but rank speculation? This does not mean, however, that al-Ṭabarî simply repeats everything he receives from his predecessors or that he had no point of view of his own. On the contrary, it seems clear that al-Ṭabarî screened his accounts carefully and so projected his particular interpretation of events by editorial manipulation, arrangement, and omission.²

Because of this method, al-Ṭabarî's point of view often becomes clear only when his treatment of a particular episode is compared with that of other compilers. For example, in relating the episode of Mālik b. Nuwayrah and the tribe of Tamīm, al-Ṭabarî tells us relatively little about how Mālik, who had been appointed tax agent over the Banū Ḥanzalah by the Prophet, came to be considered a quasi-apostate and how he earned his nickname "al-Jafūl." These things are related much more fully by other compilers, like al-Diyārbakrī and al-Balansi. On the other hand, al-Ṭabarî dwells at length on Mālik's eventual death while captive in the hands of the troops of Khalid b. al-Walid. He also focuses on Khālid's hasty marriage with Mālik's widow, on the angry reaction of 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb to this act, and on Abū Bakr's handling of the case. The latter issues are legal and political ones but, above all, questions of personal morality and its relation to political authority, which often seems to be what interested al-Ṭabarî most. When compared with the accounts in al-Balânsî (pp. 5off.), for example, al-Ṭabarî's narratives, derived from Sayf b. 'Umar, read like an effort to divert the reader's attention from the questionable behavior of Mālik b. Nuwayrah that led to his captivity in the first place. This might be considered simply another example of Sayf's desire to exculpate his tribe, Tamīm, for responsibility for the riddah, as noted long ago by Wellhausen. On the other hand, Sayf's account—unlike that in al-Balânsî—also exonerates Khālid b. al-Walîd from direct personal responsibility for killing Mālik. The point here is not to show that one or another of these alternative points of view is better but simply to demonstrate how al-Ṭabarî and other authors were able to guide their readers' attention to the issues—and perhaps, to the conclusions—that they wished by means of editorial manipulation and selection.

---

². On this aspect of al-Ṭabarî's editorial work, see the pioneering study by M. G. S. Hodgson, "Two Pre-Modern Muslim Historians."

Al-Ṭabarî uses the "cut and paste" method of khabar history, in which discrete accounts (akhbār, sing. khabar) on specific events are arranged one after another to provide fuller treatment of events. Because synthetic reformulation of material from various sources is eschewed, the compilation often suffers from poor coordination of the narrative and contains little, if any, analysis at all. For example, al-Ṭabarî likes to begin his examination of the riddah of a particular tribe (person, group) by relating what contacts, if any, that tribe had had with the Prophet Muḥammad and Islam before the Prophet's death. This material is presumably included to establish for certain that the tribesmen were, in fact, apostates who had given up the true faith after having acknowledged it. However, it is often not clearly set off from accounts of the riddah proper, so that it may be confusing to the reader, who encounters information about the events of the riddah in the year 11 and about events in earlier years jumbled together in successive akhbār. In other instances, the straitjacket of khabar history sometimes leads al-Ṭabarī to mention in an incidental way characters who only later receive a proper introduction into the narrative. For example, in relating Tulayhah's rebellion, 'Uyaynāh b. al-Ḥisn is mentioned along with Tulayhah (p. 62, below), without any clarification of who 'Uyaynāh was and what role he played in the riddah; this comes only later (p. 68, below). As a given body of material may be covered in several different akhbār, moreover, overlaps, repetitions, verbatim repeats, and the like are common, even in different accounts by one and the same transmitter. Of course, between accounts related on the authority of different transmitters, overlaps are often multiple and extensive.

---

The disjointed nature of al-Ṭabarī's presentation becomes especially clear when we compare his text with others in search of parallels. Frequently, al-Ṭabarī's accounts do not provide a very complete or balanced overview of a particular event from the narrative point of view. His accounts of the battles at Buzākhah, Butāh, and even al-Yamāmah, though including much, also leave out much, knowledge of which is nonetheless implied or assumed in the accounts he does include. This means that accounts in other sources often provide the key to understanding the meaning of obscure or elliptical references in al-Ṭabarī's narratives.

On the other hand, al-Ṭabarī also sometimes includes material not found elsewhere; for example, his several accounts comparing miracles performed by the Prophet with failed efforts by Musaylimah to duplicate them (p. 110, below, from Sayf) do not occur in the other sources I have consulted.

Al-Ṭabarī's heavy reliance on the narratives of Sayf b. 'Umar in recounting the events of this volume warrants some comment here. Sayf has been severely criticized by Wellhausen and other scholars for the apparent tribal chauvinism and chronological absurdity of his accounts, which these scholars have dismissed as "historical novels" of little value to the modern historian. Recently, a number of scholars have softened this criticism considerably, arguing that some of Sayf's presumed shortcomings are merely reflections of the kind of popular narrative he collected, that the chronology of other authors has little more claim to veracity than that of Sayf, and that his narratives do not so much contradict accounts by other transmitters, as they complement them by viewing events from a completely different vantage point.

Sayf's narratives on the riddah (and on the conquests to follow) were evidently the fullest available to al-Ṭabari. Other transmitters, like Ibn Isḥaq and Abū Mikhnaf, also provided al-Ṭabari with some material, but its bulk is dwarfed by that coming via Sayf. It may be that al-Ṭabari preferred Sayf's material because it conformed to the political and theological perspective that he himself wished to convey. On the other hand, we must recall that al-Ṭabari, as a traditionist, would have insisted that his sources meet the strict standards imposed by traditionists in evaluating transmitted material; one of his main purposes in writing his history seems to have been to establish the writing of history on the same systematic basis found in the study of hadith, where the study of transmitted accounts had first been scientifically pursued. Al-Ṭabari's heavy reliance on Sayf's material, then, can in some measure be taken as an affirmation of its perceived reliability in the eyes of one of the leading intellectual figures of the day.

Al-Ṭabari's fondness for Sayf poses a definite handicap for the translator, however, because Sayf's narratives are frequently much more difficult to understand—and hence to translate—than those of other transmitters. The accounts of Ibn Isḥaq or of

7. E.g., Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, pp. 1-7; M. J. De Goeje, Mémoire sur la conquête de la Syrie; Murtaḍā al-'Askārī, Kḥamsūn wa mi‘āh sāḥābi mukhtalāq.

8. On chronology, see Donner, Conquests, pp. 142ff. Landau-Tasseron, "Sayf b. ʿUmar in Medieval and Modern Scholarship," surveys the literature on Sayf and offers several cogent reasons why his compilations deserve serious consideration as sources.

Ibn al-Kalbi (from Abū Mikhnaf), for example, often come as welcome interludes of lucidity amid long stretches of Sayf's vexing prose. Without going into great detail, we can note five specific features of Sayf's prose style that make it especially difficult. First, Sayf's narratives often include elliptical phrases that can be virtually opaque unless the fuller context to which the phrase refers is known from another account. Related to this is his penchant for using numerous pronouns in long passages, leaving it unclear at times who or what the antecedent of the various pronouns may be. Second, Sayf sometimes uses a verb in one form to signify an action usually referred to by a verb of another form, for example wa‘āda bi- (III) for “to threaten” instead of the usual aw‘āda bi- (IV). Third, he sometimes employs known words with unknown meanings or with prepositions not associated with them in the dictionaries. Fourth, verb and subject sometimes seem not in grammatical agreement, or verbs have no apparent subject. Fifth, Sayf sometimes seems to use certain particles, like ḥattā, thumma, etc., with unorthodox meanings.

These and other anomalies of Sayf's narrative style may be more than just a headache for the translator, however; they may also be clues to the origins of his material. For they suggest that Sayf was not engaged mainly in polishing his narratives into an acceptable literary style but was, rather, intent on relating a variety of stories he had collected from informants hailing from diverse tribes—tribes whose differing dialects may be responsible for the grammatical and stylistic anomalies of Sayf's accounts. We have seen that Sayf was criticized harshly by Wellhausen for presenting a picture of events that favored his own tribe of Tamīm, but the chains of informants Sayf prefacer to his accounts reveal that his informants came from many tribes in addition to Tamim, and it seems likely that Sayf (or some of his immediate informants) made a concerted effort to collect tribal oral traditions that had never been written down. Other clues, too, point to possible oral origins of much of Sayf's narrated material—not only the generally rough and disjointed nature of the overall compilation but also such details as occasional lapses into the “narrative present” in tales otherwise couched in the past.14

Sayf's rendition of the riddah in the Yemen offers an interesting case in point. In general, the section is very confusing, as the material on al-Aswad's rebellion is related in tandem with material on the Prophet's appointment of tax agents and his death in a way that makes the chronological relationship of the different events quite unclear. In fact, al-Ṭabarī includes not one but two quite lengthy narrations of the beginnings of the riddah in the Yemen on Sayf's authority (pp. 18-34, 34-38), and, though these two versions of Sayf's have many common features (enough to make each of some help in decoding the other), they also display considerable divergence in detail.15 Both are cast in an unusually problematic Arabic, and it seems likely that we are faced here with two oral variants of a common tribal tradition about the killing of al-Aswad.

Given the frequent difficulties of Sayf's Arabic, the search for close parallels to his accounts in texts other than al-Ṭabarī offers the hope of finding clearer wordings for awkward phrases. What is most interesting, however, is that the search for parallels reveals that Sayf's Arabic was almost as problematic to medieval

---

14. E.g., p. 179, where Sayf has the imperfect, lā tuḥdithu..., lā tajidu.... It is worth noting that Ibn al-Athīr's almost verbatim quote from this passage (Kāmil, II, 380) changes the verbs from the imperfect (denoting incomplete action) to the jussive (denoting completed action): lam yuhdith... lam yajid....

15. There is actually a third summary of events on Sayf's authority at pp. 158-61, but it is very different from the two noted above.

16. Cf. Baladhūrī, Futūh, pp. 94ff., on the apostasy of al-ʿarab, referring to the largely nomadic groups of Sulaym, ʿAmīr b. Ṣaʿṣaʿah, Asad, Fazārah, Tamim, etc., but with separate sections on the apostasy of Kindah and al-Aswad al-ʿAnṣī and his followers, both groups of sedentary people. Cf. also Balansī, 5, where the muhājirūn say to Abū Bakr, when Usāmah is away, “We don't have the power to fight the Arabs,” referring to the nomads of Fazārah.
Arab historians as it is to us. This offers us only the cold comfort of knowing that our problem in deciphering a given passage lies more with the text than it does with our knowledge of classical Arabic; for the parallels often do not assist us at all in our goal of achieving a satisfactory translation of al-Ṭabari’s text.

Passages in most authors who deal with the riddah were only occasionally useful in clarifying the precise wording of a passage but were frequently helpful in clarifying the general context of events. Most useful in this respect were al-Balansi, al-Diyārbakrī, and al-Baladhuri’s Futūḥ al-buldān. The longest sustained parallel to al-Ṭabari’s text on the riddah is provided by Ibn al-Athir in his al-Kāmil fī al-ta’rikh, for he relied heavily (indeed, almost exclusively) on al-Ṭabari for his account. According to De Goeje’s stemma of the manuscripts of al-Ṭabari, Ibn al-Athir relied on an earlier manuscript, now lost, that was also the source for the Berlin, Oxford, and one of the Istanbul manuscripts on which the Leiden edition of the text was partially based. Ibn al-Athir is thus occasionally helpful but more frequently frustrating; though long, straightforward passages from al-Ṭabari are quoted by him verbatim, problematic passages are often simply dropped altogether, and the remnants harmonized into a plausible narrative or condensed in summaries that, though clear in meaning, really represent merely Ibn al-Athir’s commentary on what al-Ṭabari’s text might have meant. Moreover, we do not always agree with Ibn al-Athir’s judgment; at p. 107, for example, Ibn al-Athir fills in the subject of the phrase wa ḫīna yantahi ila amri-hi as Musaylima, but it seems to me more likely to refer to Nahār “al-Rajjāl.”

Of course, Ibn al-Athir’s evasion of many textual difficulties means that the manuscript he used already contained many of the same problems we face. This may, of course, simply be the result of corruptions creeping into the text in the manner normal in a manuscript tradition, but I think that it is really further evidence that the texts on the riddah, particularly those related from Sayf, are in fact archaic—in both origin and language—and hence not well understood already in al-Ṭabari’s day, much less in Ibn al-Athir’s. The fact that virtually all the really problematic spots occur in Sayf’s narratives, rather than in those related by other informants, argues against the random hand of manuscript corruption as the source of most difficulties.

Volume 19 of the Cairo (1975) edition of al-Nuwayri's Nihāyat al-arab fi funūn al-adab also has a long section on the riddah that is derived, primarily, from al-Ṭabarī. Although a few of al-Nuwayri’s circumlocutions are helpful in establishing the sense of al-Ṭabarī’s text, he seems even more determined than Ibn al-Athīr to evade opaque passages.

The problematic nature of many passages in the text has had several practical implications. First and foremost, of course, it means that the translation offered here can be considered only a provisional one. We can hope that someday, when scholars have undertaken a much more thorough examination of the text on the basis of all available manuscripts (and perhaps even on the basis of new manuscripts yet to be discovered), a much surer edition of the text can be prepared, on the basis of which a definitive translation can be prepared. In the meantime, readers must be warned that, despite my efforts and those of several very learned Arabists who kindly agreed to consider rough passages with me, there remains considerable scope for distortion or outright error in this translation.

A second practical implication of the text’s complexity is that instead of noting all the many manuscript variants noted by the Leiden edition, I have chosen only a few that seemed to me significant in clarifying the meaning of the passage or in suggesting a plausible different meaning. The reason for this is simply the sheer number of manuscript variants—sometimes exceeding twenty per page. To have included all of them would have added at least two thousand additional notes to the volume, most of little consequence for the translation. The Arabist who uses the translation, however, and who is interested in a particular passage of text must still refer back to the Arabic text itself to see whether or not some variant that I have not noted may bear important implications for his or her work.

I have been most fortunate to have had the kind assistance of several very learned colleagues, who reviewed my translation of problematic passages and suggested a large number of changes. First and foremost I wish to thank Dr. Ella Landau-Tasseron of the Hebrew University, a fine Arabist and without doubt the leading specialist on the history of the riddah in our generation of scholars. With the careful attention she displays in all her work, she reconsidered many thorny passages and offered extensive and meticulously detailed corrections and improvements, both linguistic and historical. My colleagues at Chicago, Dr. Farouk Mustafa and Dr. Wadad al-Qadi, sat with me for many hours and helped me to gain a better understanding of many passages (particularly of poetry) the import of which, or some important nuance of which, had escaped me in part or completely. To all of them I offer my heartfelt thanks for having so generously shared their time (so limited) and knowledge (so extensive) in a way that has immeasurably improved the reliability and accuracy of the translation presented here. As none of these colleagues reviewed the entire text of the translation, however, the errors and oversights that doubtless remain in it must redound my ears alone. I also wish to thank my editor, Dr. Estelle Whelan, who saw this volume through the press.

In closing, I list a few relatively common words, the translation of which from classical Arabic is often problematic, with my explanation of the way I have translated them (or, in some cases, refused to do so). I hope this may help Arabists and general readers alike to get a better sense of some passages where these words are used.

al-'arab. I have generally rendered this simply as "Arabs," but the word does not, of course, have the modern nationalist meaning, which has been known only since the nineteenth century. Rather, it means either "nomads," that is, nonsedentary pastoral people, or "speakers of Arabic"; not infrequently, the text is ambiguous as to which meaning is intended, for which reason it seemed advisable to leave the term untranslated.

amr. The basic meaning is either "affair, matter" or "order, command," but it is used in a wide variety of contexts and so requires very flexible rendering. It is variously translated "situation," "cause," "purpose," "something," "leadership," or "authority."

al-nās. Basically "people" (according to Glossary, actually "chiefs, noblemen" or "horsemen"), in many cases it is best translated "the army," always referring to one's own side.

al-qawm. Basically "group, tribe, people," it often means "the enemy," that is, the other side.

din. Sometimes rendered "religion," e.g. din Allah, p. 56, but sometimes, especially in political contexts, best rendered "obedience." At times din Allah seems to mean "obedience to God," especially when din is juxtaposed with islām "submission," as on p. 57.

Fred M. Donner
Map 1. Western Arabia at the Time of the Riddah
Map 2. Eastern Arabia at the Time of the Riddah
The Events of the Year

II (cont'd)

(MARCH 29, 632–MARCH 17, 633)

What Took Place between the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār over the Matter of Leadership at the Portico of the Banū Sā‘īdah

According to Hishām b. Muḥammad—Abū Mikhnaf—ʿAbdallāh b. ʿAbd Ṭāhān b. Abī ʿAmrah al-Anṣārī: When the Prophet passed away, the Anṣār gathered on the portico of the Banū Sā‘īdah said, “Let us appoint Sa‘d b. ʿUbādah to be in charge of

1. The Muhājirūn (often translated as “Emigrants,” but see note 81, below, on hijrah) were mainly those people of the Meccan tribe of Quraysh—the Prophet’s tribe—who emigrated to Medina to join the Prophet’s community there, but they included some people of other groups who embraced Islam and settled in Medina; the Anṣār (“Helpers”) were the Medinan converts to Islam, comprising mainly the rival Medinan tribes of Aws and Khazraj; the Banū Sā‘īdah b. Ka‘b were a clan of the Khazraj. For an analysis of the traditions on Abū Bakr’s election, see Caetani, 511–13.
3. A chief of the Khazraj tribe of Medina and one of the twelve naqībs, or guarantors, of the Medinan Anṣār chosen by the Prophet during the meeting at al-ʿAqabah, before the hijrah; cf. Ibn Sa’d, III/2, 134–35, 142–45.
our affairs after Muhammad.” They made Sa’d come out to them; but he was sick, and after they had gathered he said to his son or to one of his cousins, “Because of my illness I cannot make my words heard by all the people. Take my speech from me and make them hear it.” So he spoke, and the man memorized what he said and said [it] in a loud voice so that his companions would hear it. After praising and extolling God, he said:

Company of the Anṣār! You have precedence in religion and merit in Islam that no [other] tribe of the Arabs can claim. Muḥammad remained ten-odd years in his tribe, calling them to worship the Merciful and to cast off idols and graven images, but only a few men of his tribe believed in Him, and they were able neither to protect the Apostle of God, nor to render His religion strong, nor to divert from themselves the oppression that befell them all; until, when He intended excellence for you, He sent nobility to you and distinguished you with grace.
Thus God bestowed upon you faith in Him and in His Apostle, and protection for him and his companions, and strength for him and his faith, and battle [jihād] for his enemies. You were the most severe people against his enemies who were among you, and the most troublesome to his enemies who were not from among you, so that the Arabs became upright in God’s cause, willingly or unwillingly, and the distant one submitted in abject humiliation, until through you God made great slaughter in the earth⁴ for His Apostle, and by your swords the Arabs were abased for him.⁵ When God took (the Prophet) to Himself,⁶ he was pleased with you and consoled by you. [So] keep [control of] this matter to yourselves, to the exclusion of others, for it is yours and yours alone.

---

4. Reading athkhana ... fi al-ardi, instead of the text’s and Nuwayri’s (p. 30) athkhana ... al-arda. Cf. Qur’an 8:67.
5. Translating the verb dānāt as transitive, rather than intransitive.
6. I.e., at the time of the Prophet’s death.
What Took Place between the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār

They answered him all together, "Your opinion is right, and you have spoken correctly. We will not diverge from your opinion, and we shall put you in charge of this business. For indeed, you are sufficient for us and satisfactory to whoever is righteous among the believers." But then they began to debate among themselves, and [some] said, "What if the Muhājirūn of Quraysh refuse, saying, 'We are the Muhājirūn and the first companions of the Apostle of God; we are his kinsmen and his friends.' So why do you dispute this matter with us after him?" [Another] group of [the Anṣār] said, "Then we should say, 'let us have a leader from among ourselves, and you a leader from among yourselves,' for we should never be satisfied with less than this leadership." When Sa'd b. 'Ubadah heard this, he said, "This is the beginning of weakness."

'Umar learned of this and went to the Prophet's house and sent to Abū Bakr, who was in the building. Now 'Ali b. Abī Ṭālib was working busily preparing the Apostle [for burial], so ['Umar] sent a message to Abū Bakr to come out to him. Abū Bakr sent back that he was occupied, but ['Umar] sent him another message, saying, "Something has happened that you must attend to in person." So he came out to him, and ['Umar] said to him, "Didn't you know that the Anṣār have gathered at the portico of the Banū Sā'idah intending to put Sa'd b. 'Ubadah in charge of this affair? [Even] the best of them is saying, 'A leader for us and a leader for Quraysh.'" So the two of them hurried toward them; they met Abu 'Ubayda b. al-Jarrah, and the three of them marched toward them. [On 7. 'Ashiratuhu wa awliyatuhu. Ibn Abī Hadīd, I, 302, has awliyā'uhu wa 'itratuhu; Nuwayrī, 30, has 'ashiratuhu wa awliyā'uhu.

---

9. 'Ali b. Abī Ṭālib was the Prophet's cousin and the husband of the Prophet's daughter Fāṭima; he would later be the fourth caliph or successor to the Prophet as head of the Muslim community. 'Umar ibn al-Khaṭṭāb and Abū Bakr, in the preceding sentence, were early converts and close associates of the Prophet and would later serve as the second and first successors of the Prophet, respectively.
their way] they were met by ‘Āšîm b. ‘Adī and ‘Uwaym b. Sā‘īdah,11 who said, “Go back, for it will not be as you wish.” But they refused [to turn back] and arrived while [the Anṣār] were gathered.

According to ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb: We came to them, and I had pieced together12 a speech that I wanted to deliver to them; but, when I had pushed in among them and was about to begin my address, Abū Bakr said to me, “Easy does it, ‘Umar, until I have spoken; then afterward say whatever you wish.” So he spoke [first], and there was nothing that I had wanted to say that he did not come to, or amplify it.

According to ‘Abdallāh b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān:13 Abū Bakr began by praising and extolling God. Then he said, “Verily God sent Muḥammad as an Apostle to His creatures and as a witness to his community, that they should worship God and affirm His oneness. For they had worshiped various deities other than Him, alleging that [those deities] were intercessors before Him on their behalf and were beneficial for them. [Those gods] were of carved stone and hewn wood.” Then he recited, “And they serve beside God that which can neither harm nor help them, saying: ‘These are our intercessors before God.’”14 And they said, “We worship them only that they may make us nearer to God.” [Abū Bakr continued,] “Now the Arabs found it most distressing that they should leave the religion of their forefathers; so from among his tribe God singled out the first Muhājirūn, by having

---

11. The names vary in different accounts. Ibn Hishām, 1016 [Ibn Isḥāq—al-Zuhrī—‘Urwah b. al-Zubayr], Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, I, 293; Şan’ānī, V, 445 [al-Zuhrī—‘Urwah]; and Diyarbakrī, II, 167, give the first name as Ma‘n b. ‘Adī; the last gives the second name as ‘Uwaymir b. Sā‘īdah. Şan’ānī, V, 442, gives simply “two righteous men of the Anṣār” and has them saying “Go and settle your affairs among yourselves.”

12. Reading zawwartyu (instead of zawwaytu [“I cast off?”] or rawītu [“I related”] of the manuscripts), as suggested by De Goeje in Emendanda, Ibn al-‘Athīr Kāmil, II, 327; Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, I, 293; Ibn Hishām, 1015–16; and Nuwayrī, 32. Şan’ānī, V, 443, has rawwaytu ‘I asked [s.o.] to recite’[?].

them affirm that he spoke the truth and by their belief in him, and consoling him and enduring patiently with him the harsh insults their tribe [directed] against them and [their tribe], calling them liars. All the people were opposed to (the Muhājirūn) and rebuked them; but they were not distressed by their small numbers or by the hatred of the people for them or by (the people's) single-minded opposition to them, for they were the first who worshiped God on the earth and who believed in God and the Apostle. They are his friends and kinsmen16 and the most deserving people in this matter after him; only a wrong-doer would dispute that. Oh company of the Anṣār, your superiority in religion and great precedence in Islam are undeniable. May God be satisfied with you as helpers (ansār) for His religion and His Apostle. He made his hijrah to you, and the majority of his wives and his companions are among you; so—after the first Muhājirūn—there is no one among us who is in your station. We are the leaders, and you the helpers;17 matters shall not be settled without consultation, nor shall we decide on them without you."18

Then al-Ḥubāb b. al-Mundhir b. al-Jamūh19 stood up and said, "Oh company of the Anṣār, take command of yourselves, for you overshadow [other] people.20 No one will dare oppose you [if you do], nor will the people21 proceed, except in accordance with your opinion. You are the people of power and wealth, numerous and strong in resistance and experienced, having boldness and courage. The people look only to what you do; so do not differ among yourselves, lest your judgment (ra'y) be spoiled and your cause (amr) collapse.22 This one [i.e., Abū Bakr]

---

18. A loose parallel in Ibn Sa'd, III/1, 129, ll. 4ff., makes clear the idea of shared power.
20. Lit., "the people are in your shade and shadow."
22. Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, I, 302, has "lest you spoil your affairs (umūr) for yourselves."
insisted on what you have heard. So [let us have] a leader from among us, and [they] a leader from among them." At this 'Umar said, "Absolutely not, two cannot come to agreement in a joining. By God, the Arabs will not be content to give you the leadership when their Prophet was not one of you; but they would not prevent their affairs from being led by one of those among whom prophethood [had appeared] and from whom the guardian of their affairs [was chosen]. In that [fact] is manifest argument and clear proof for us against those Arabs who deny [it]. Who would attempt to wrest from us the sovereignty (sultan) of Muḥammad and his authority (imārah), seeing that we are his friends and his kinsmen, except someone advancing falsehood, inclining to sin, or hurling into destruction?" [But] al-Ḥubāb b. al-Mundhir stood up [again] and said, "Oh company of the Anṣār, take charge of your own affairs and do not listen to what this one and his companions say, for they would do away with your share in this matter. If they refuse to give you what you ask for, then drive them out of this country, and seize control of these matters despite them. For you are more deserving of this authority than they are, as it was by your swords that those who were not yet converted came to obey this religion. I am their much-rubbed little rubbing post, and their propped little palm tree loaded with fruit. By God, if you wish to return it as a stump then do so!" 'Umar said, "Then may God kill you!" and (al-Ḥubāb) replied, "Rather may He kill 23. Lit., "denied everything except what you heard." Ibn Abi al-Hadid, I, 302, has "If this one has insisted..., then let us have..." Cf. Diyārbakri, II, 169 top.

24. This phrase is, at best, laconic. Ibn Abi al-Hadid, I, 302, has "two swords cannot be joined in one scabbard"; Al-Ṣanʿānī, V, 444, has "two swords are not suitable in one scabbard." The idea, in any case, is that one community cannot be led by two people.
26. Lit., "grasp upon your hands."
27. Imārah; but cf. Nuwayri, 35 top: amr "affair."
29. I.e., "I am sought out by those needing advice as camels with mange seek the scratching post, and I have a numerous family to defend me" (Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, s.v. "jidhl"). Cf. Ibn Hishām, 1016; Diyārbakri, II, 168, 169; Nuwayri, 32 bottom, 35 top.
What Took Place between the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār

you!" At this Abū `Ubaydah said, "Oh company of the Anṣār, you were the first who helped and strengthened, so do not be the first to substitute and change for the worse."\[1842\]

Then Bashir b. Sa'd,\[31\] father of al-Nu'mān b. Bashir, stood up and said, "Oh company of the Anṣār, if indeed by God we were the first in merit in battling the polytheists and in precedence in this religion, we would want by [these deeds] only [to gain] our Lord's pleasure, and obedience to our Prophet, and sustenance for ourselves; it is not appropriate for us to exalt ourselves over [other] people. Let us not seek by it some transitory thing of the world, for indeed God is the One Who provides [such things] for us out of His grace.\[32\] In truth Muḥammad was from Quraysh, and his people are more entitled to [hold] [authority] and more suitable. I swear by God that He shall never see me contesting this matter [amr] with them. So fear God and do not oppose them or dispute with them."

At this Abū Bakr said,\[33\] "This is `Umar, and this is Abū `Ubaydah; render the oath of allegiance to whichever of them you wish." But they both said, "No, by God, we shall not undertake [to hold] this authority over you, for you are the best of the Muhājirūn, the "second of two when they were in the cave,"\[34\] and the Apostle of God's deputy [khalifah] over the prayer; and prayer is the most meritorious obedience [din] of the Muslims. So who should precede you or undertake this authority over you? Extend your hand so we may render the oath of allegiance to you!"

When\[35\] the two of them went forth to render the oath of allegiance to him, Bashir b. Sa'd went to him ahead of them and swore allegiance to him [first]. At this al-Ḥūbāb b. al-Mundhir shouted to him, "Oh Bashir b. Sa'd, you are in op-

---

30. I.e., as the Muslim community was united and strong before, a change to disunity will be a setback.
32. Lit., "God is the benefactor of grace upon us by that."
34. A quotation from Qur'ān 9:40, considered by Muslim exegetes to refer to an episode when Abū Bakr made the hijrah with the Prophet.
position [to your kinsmen];

what drove you to [do] what you have done? Did you envy your cousin the sovereignty?" He replied, "By God, no! But I abhorred contending with a group for a right that God had given them." Now when the Aws saw what Bashir b. Sa'd had done and what Quraysh had called for and what the Khazraj were demanding by way of giving sovereignty to Sa'd b. 'Ubádah, they said to one another [and among them was Usayd b. Huďayr, one of the naqíbs]. "By God, if once you appoint the Khazraj over you, they will always have the advantage over you on that account, and will never give you any share in it with them. So stand up and render the oath of allegiance to Abū Bakr." So they came forth to him and rendered the oath of allegiance to him. Thus that which Sa'd b. 'Ubádah and the Khazraj had agreed to do was defeated.

Hishám—Abū Mikhnaf—Abū Bakr b. Muhammad al-Khužá'í: Aslam approached en masse until the streets were packed with them, and they rendered the oath of allegiance to Abū Bakr. 'Umar used to say, "It was not until I saw Aslam that I was certain we had won the day."

Hishám—Abū Mikhnaf—'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Rahmān. People approached from all sides swearing allegiance to Abū Bakr, and they almost stepped on Sa'd b. 'Ubádah. Some of Sa'd's associates said, "Be careful not to step on Sa'd!" At this 'Umar said, "Kill him, may God slay him!" Then he stepped on his head, saying, "I intend to tread upon you until your arm is 36. Reading, with Cairo, 'aqqatka 'aqāqi, for 'aqaqta 'aqāqi in the text. Cf. Ibn Manzūr, X, 257, for the idiom.

---

37. Reading mA akhrajaka for mA ahwajaka, as suggested by P. De Jong in notes to text. However, Nuwayrí, 36, has the same reading as the text.
38. I.e., his fellow tribesman of Khazraj, Sa'd b. 'Ubádah.
39. On the naqíbs see note 2, above. On Usayd, a chief of the Aws tribe who had led them in battle against the Khazraj at the battle of Bu'āth before Islam, see Ibn Sa'd, III/2, 135–37.
40. Cf. Nuwayrí, 36–38, as far as p. 10.
41. A tribe associated with Khužá'ah, living west and southwest of Medina and among Muhammad's earliest backers after his arrival in Medina. Cf. Watt, Muhammad at Medina, 82ff.
42. Lit., "that I was certain of victory."
What Took Place between the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār

dislocated. 44 At this Sa’d took hold of ‘Umar’s beard and said, “By God, if you remove a single hair from it you’ll return with no front teeth in your mouth.” Then Abū Bakr said, “Take it easy, ‘Umar; compassion would be more effective at this point.” So ‘Umar turned away from him. Sa’d said, “By God, if I had the strength to get up, you would have heard from me in the regions and streets [of Medina], roaring in a way that would make you and your companions take cover; by God, I shall join to you a group among whom you would be a follower, not a leader. [Now] carry me from this place.” So they carried him and took him into his house. He was left for several days; then he was sent to [and told] that he should come to render the oath of allegiance, for the people [generally] had done so and his tribe as well. But he said, “By God, I shall not do it, before I have shot at you with whatever arrows are in my quiver, and have reddened the head of my spear, and struck you with my sword, as long as my hand controls it. I will fight you with my family and those who obey me of my tribe. I swear by God, [even] if the jinn gathered to you with the people, 48 I would not render the oath of allegiance to you, until I am brought forth before my God and know what my reckoning is.”

When Abū Bakr was informed of this, ‘Umar said to him, “Pester him until he renders the oath of allegiance.” But Bashir b. Sa’d said, “He has refused; he has made up his mind, and wouldn’t render the oath of allegiance to you even if he were

44. Reading ‘adudaka with Cairo edition and Emendanda, instead of the text’s ‘idwaka “your limb.” The emendation does not solve all the problems in the text, however, as the context immediately before and after the word refers to Sa’d’s head [e.g., “if you remove a single hair from it”], not his arms. In view of this, one might expect here that ‘Umar may have threatened to break Sa’d’s neck [i.e., dislocate his head?].

45. Or, perhaps, “gentleness” or “tact”: rifq.

46. Reading with Emendanda, instead of “among whom I was a follower” in the text.

47. Ibn Sa’d, III/2, 144, ll. 24ff., provides a close parallel to the remainder of this paragraph and the following one.

48. An echo of the Qur’ānic “men and jinn,” meaning all creatures [e.g., Qur’ān 17:88]; a loose English rendering might be something like “even if man and beast joined in supporting you.”

49. Reading u’rađu with Ibn Abī al-Ḥadid, I, 303; Nuwayri, 37; and Cairo ed.
killed; and he would not be killed without his children and family and a party of his kinsmen being killed with him. So leave him alone, leaving him won’t harm you, he is only one man,”50 So they left him alone. They came to accept the advice of Bashir b. Sa’d, consulting him whenever it seemed right to them to do so.

Sa’d51 [b. ‘Ubādah] used not to pray in their [daily] prayer or congregate with them [for Friday prayer]; he performed the pilgrimage [to Mecca] but did not press on with them in the multitudes.52 He continued thus until Abū Bakr died.

According to ‘Ubaydallāh b. Sa’d53—his uncle—Sayf b. ’Umar—Sahl and Abū ‘Uthmān—al-Ḍāḥḥāk b. Khalīfah: When al-Ḥubāb b. al-Mundhir stood up, he drew his sword and said, “I am their much-rubbed little rubbing post and their propped little palm tree loaded with fruit.54 I am [like] the father of a cub in the lion’s den, related to the lion [as son to father].” Then ’Umar attacked him, striking his hand so that the sword dropped out, and picked it up. Then he pounced upon Sa’d [b. ‘Ubādah]; and they all fell upon him. The people rendered the oath of allegiance successively [to Abū Bakr]; and Sa’d rendered the oath of allegiance. It was an action taken without consideration, like those of the jāhiliyyah.55 Abū Bakr stood up before them. Someone said, when Sa’d was being trampled, “You have killed Sa’d,” to which ’Umar replied, “God killed him, for he is a hypocrite”; and ’Umar struck the sword on a stone, breaking it.56

50. Ibn Abi al-Hadid, I, 292, has a similar phrase, but applied to ’Ali b. Abī Ṭālib as the one holding out against Abū Bakr.
52. Referring to the multitudes surging to and from ‘Arafah during the culmination of the pilgrimage rituals on the eighth-tenth days of the month of Dhu al-Ḥijjah.
53. Text has Sa’id; cf. Emendanda, Cairo edition, manuscript C of Leiden edition.
54. Cf. p. 6, above.
55. The pejorative term for the pre-Islamic age in Islamic historiography; roughly "age of barbarism," i.e., before the enlightenment of Islam had arrived.
56. The text is difficult, but similar passages help clarify the meaning. In Ibn Abi al-Hadid, I, 315, ’Umar seizes the sword of al-Zubayr b. al-‘Awwām as he is about to recognize ’Ali b. Abī Ṭālib and breaks it on a stone; in Ibn Abi al-Hadid, I, 291, and Nuwayri, 39, al-Zubayr’s sword is taken away and broken on a rock at
What Took Place between the Muhajirūn and the Anṣār

According to ‘Ubaydallāh b. Sa’d—his uncle Ya’qūb—Sayf—Mubahshir—Jābir:58 Sa’d b. ‘Ubadah said to Abū Bakr on that day, “Oh company of Muhajirūn, you begrudge me sovereignty (al-imdrāh), and you and my tribe have compelled me to render the oath of allegiance.” At this they replied, “If we had compelled you to division and then you had come to unity (jama‘ah) [of your own accord] you would be in a comfortable position; but we forced [you] to unity, so there is no going back on it.59 If you withdraw a hand from obedience, or divide the union, we will strike off your head.”60

According to ‘Ubaydallāh b. Sa’d—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sarī b. Yahyā—Shu’ayb b. Ibrāhīm—Sayf b. ‘Umar—Ibn Damrah—his father—Āṣim b. ‘Adī: Two days after the Apostle of God’s death, Abū Bakr’s public crier called out so that the mission [ba‘th] of Usāmah62 could be completed: “Up now! No one from Usāmah’s army should remain in Medina, but should go out to his camp at al-Jurf.”63 And [Abū Bakr] stood up among the people, praised and extolled God, and said,64 “Oh people, I am like you. I do not know, perhaps you will impose on me that which the Apostle of God was able to do. God chose Muhammad above [all] the worlds and protected him from evils; but I am only a follower, not an innovator (muḥtadī). If I am upright, then follow me; but, if I deviate, straighten me out.65

The Apostle of God died with no one of this community having

---

57. See note 53, above.
59. Lit., “there is no cancellation in it.” The concept of jama‘ah, or political unity of the Muslim community, was from the start an important one in Islamic political discourse.
60. Lit., “we will strike off that in which are your eyes”; cf. Lane, V, 2215.
61. See note 53, above.
62. Usāmah b. Zayd, the Prophet’s freedman, was sent by him to raid the Balqā’ region of southern Syria just before the Prophet’s final illness overtook him, cf. Ibn Hisham, 970, 999; Wāqidi, Maghāzī, 1117ff.
63. A place three miles from Medina in the direction of Syria [Yāqūt, s.v.].
64. For widely divergent “accession speeches” of Abū Bakr, see Ibn Hisham, 1017; Ibn Abī al-Ḥadīd, I, 314; Ibn Sa’d, III/ 1, 129.
a claim against him concerning anything wrongfully taken [for which the punishment would be] one lash of the whip or [even] less. I have a Satan who takes possession of me; so when he comes to me, avoid me so that I may have no [evil] effect [even] on your hair and your skins.66 You come and go [in this life] at an appointed time, knowledge of which is hidden from you; so if you are able [to ensure] that this appointed time elapses only while you are engaged in good works, do so. But you will only be able to do that through God; so compete in putting off your appointed times, before your appointed times surrender you to the interruption of [your] works. Verily, a tribe that forgets their appointed times, and lets others do the [good] deeds—beware being like them. Haste! Hurry! Salvation! For behind you is one who searches swiftly, an appointed time whose passage is rapid. Beware of death; be forewarned by [your deceased] fathers and sons and brothers, and do not envy the living except on account of that for which you envy the dead."

He also stood up and said, after praising and extolling God: "God only accepts those works through which His countenance was desired; so strive for God in your works. Know that whatever you sincerely direct to God is among your [good] works: obedience you have rendered, or a sin you have overcome, or taxes you have paid,67 or a good work you have sent forward from ephemeral days to others that endure, to the time of your poverty and need.68 Servants of God, be forewarned by whoever among you has died, and think on those who were before you. Where were they yesterday, and where are they today?69 Where are the tyrants, and where are those who were renowned for fighting and victory on the fields of war? Time has abased them, and they have become decayed bones upon whom have been perpetuated gossip—"loathsome women for the loathsome men, and loathsome men for the loathsome women."70 Where are the kings who tilled the earth and cultivated it? They have perished, and mention of them is forgotten, and they have become as

66. I.e., so that I may not harm you in any way.
67. Daḍa' ib ataytamūhā.
68. I.e., to the Day of Judgment.
69. On this theme see C. H. Becker, "Ubi sunt, qui ante nos in mundo fuere."
nothing; but God has preserved the consequences [of their evil deeds] against them and cut them off from the desires [of this world], and they have passed away. The deeds [they did] are [still reckoned] their works, but the world is the world of others. We remained after them; and, if we take warning from them, we will be saved, but, if we are deceived by them, we will be like them. Where are the pure ones with beautiful faces, captivating in their youthfulness? They have become dust, and what they neglected to do before has become a source of grief for them. Where are those who built cities and fortified them with walls and made in them wondrous things? They have left them to those who follow after them; those are their residences, empty, while they [themselves] are in the darkness of the grave. "Do you perceive any one of them, or hear a sound from them?"

Where are those sons and brethren of yours whom you know, whose appointed times have elapsed? They have arrived according to what they had sent forward, alighting upon it and abiding for misery or happiness after death. Between God, Who has no associate, and between [any] one of His creatures there is no means of access by which He may grant him grace or divert evil from him—unless it be through obedience to Him and following His command. Know that you are required servants and that what is with Him is only attained through obedience to Him. What seems good is not good if its consequence is [hell]fire, and what seems evil is not evil if its consequence is paradise."74

‘Ubaydallāh b. Sa‘d—his uncle—Sayf; al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Hishām b. ‘Urwah—his father:76 After the oath of allegiance had been rendered to Abū Bakr and the Anṣār had come together on the matter over which they had differed, he said that Usāma’s mission should be completed. Now the Arabs77 had

74. Lit., "There is no good in a good thing that is followed by [hell]fire," etc.
75. See note 53, above.
76. Cf. Caetani, 588-89. Close parallels to the following section (through p. 17) are found in Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 334-36; and Nuwayri, 46-47.
77. Here and a few lines farther on, the word al-‘arab seems to have the sense of "nomads, bedouins"; see comments on this word in the Foreword.
apostasized, either generally or as particular individuals in every tribe. Hypocrisy appeared, and the Jews and Christians began to exalt themselves, and the Muslims were like sheep on a cold and rainy night because of the loss of their Prophet and because of their fewness and the multitude of their enemy. So the people said to [Abū Bakr], "These are the majority of the Muslims. The Arabs, as you see, have mutinied against you, so you should not separate the troop of Muslims from yourself." At this Abū Bakr replied, "By Him in Whose hands is Abū Bakr's soul, even if I thought that beasts of prey would snatch me away, I would carry out the sending of Usāmā just as the Apostle of God ordered. Even if there remained in the villages no one but myself, I would carry it out."

Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—‘Aṭīyyah—Abū Ayyūb—‘Alī; and al-Ḍaḥḥāk—Ibn ‘Abbās: Then some of the tribes who had been absent in the year of [the truce of] al-Hudaybiyah gathered about Medina and rose in rebellion. The people of Medina had gone out in the army of Usāmā; so Abū Bakr detained whoever remained of those tribes that had made hijrah within their territories, so that they became armed outposts (masālīḥ) around their tribes, but they were few.

Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Abū Ḍamrah, Abū ‘Amr, and others—al-Ḥasan b. Abū al-Ḥasan al-Baṣrī: Before his death, the Apostle of God had imposed a campaign on the people of Medina and those in their vicinity, among them ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. He had put Usāmāh b. Zayd in charge of them, but the last of them had not yet crossed the 78. Cf. Balansi, i, where this phrase is related on the authority of Ibn Ṭabari—A‘ishah; cf. also Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 334; Balādhuri, Futūḥ, 95; Diyarbakrī, II, 201.

79. I.e., those assigned to the army of Usāmāh b. Zayd.
80. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 334, following Mss. C and B of Ṭabari, has "formed [them] into an army."
81. The text refers to the act of joining the Muslim community, which in the early days was done by emigrating to and settling in Medina. This procedure was called hijrah. At some point, the Prophet seems to have allowed certain tribes to become recognized members of the community without making hijrah in Medina. On hijrah as emigration to a place or to a powerful group in order to secure its protection, see Robert Bertram Serjeant and Ronald Lewcock, San‘ā’, "San‘ā’ the 'Protected,' Hijrah," pp. 39–43.
ditch\textsuperscript{83} when the Apostle of God passed away. So Usāmah stopped with the army\textsuperscript{84} and said to 'Umar, "Return to the caliph of the Apostle of God and ask his permission for me to return with the army; for the chiefs of the army are with me along with their forces,\textsuperscript{85} and I am uneasy lest the polytheists snatch away the caliph and the Apostle of God's household and the households of the Muslims." The Ansār added, "And if he insists that we proceed, convey to him our request that he appoint in command of us a man older than Usāmah." So 'Umar went out on Usāmah's order and came to Abū Bakr and informed him of what Usāmah had said. Abū Bakr replied, "Even if the dogs and wolves were to snatch me off, I would not reverse a decision the Apostle of God had made." Then 'Umar said, "The Ansār ordered me to inform you that they would like to request that you put in charge of them a man older than Usāmah." At this Abū Bakr sprang up—he had been seated—and seized 'Umar's beard, saying, "May your mother be bereft of you and destitute of you, Ibn al-Khaṭṭāb! The Apostle of God appointed him, and you order me to dismiss him?" So 'Umar returned to the army. They said to him, "What did you do?" And he replied, "Proceed, may your mothers be bereft of you! I didn't receive [anything] for your cause from the caliph."

Then\textsuperscript{86} Abū Bakr went out until he reached them; he made them go forth, and he followed after them on foot while Usāmah was riding and 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf\textsuperscript{87} led Abū Bakr's mount. Usāmah said to him, "By God, oh caliph of the Apostle of God, either you ride or I shall dismount." But Abū Bakr said, "By God, don't dismount; nor, by God, will I ride. It will not hurt me to get my two feet dusty for an hour in God's way; but, for each \textsuperscript{83} The ditch on the edge of Medina, dug during the siege by Quraysh in A.H 7. Cf. Watt, Muhammad at Medina, 35ff.

\textsuperscript{84} Or perhaps "the people" [\textit{al-nās}], here and later in the paragraph. Diyārbakrī, II, 114, states that all the notables [\textit{wujjūh}] of the Muhājirūn and Ansār went on the raid.
\textsuperscript{85} The editor of text suggests \textit{aw julluhum} "or most of them" for \textit{wa hadduhum}; Nuwayri has \textit{wahdahum} "by themselves."
\textsuperscript{86} Cf. Sanā'ī, V, 199–200 [no. 9175].
\textsuperscript{87} An early convert from Banū Zuhra of Quraysh. Cf. El', s.v. "'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Awf" [M. Th. Houtsma—W. M. Watt].
step the warrior takes, seven hundred beauties are destined for him, and seven hundred steps\textsuperscript{88} are made visible to him, and seven hundred sins are lifted from him." Until, when he was done, (Abū Bakr) said to (Usāmah): "If you think you might help me out [by lending me the services of] ‘Umar, then do so." So Usāmah gave him permission to do that.\textsuperscript{89} Then (Abū Bakr) said, "Oh army, stop and I will order you [to do] ten [things]; learn them from me by heart. You shall not engage in treachery; you shall not act unfaithfully; you shall not engage in deception; you shall not indulge in mutilation; you shall kill neither a young child nor an old man nor a woman; you shall not fell palm trees or burn them; you shall not cut down [any] fruit-bearing tree; you shall not slaughter a sheep or a cow or a camel except for food. You will pass people who occupy themselves in monks’ cells,\textsuperscript{90} leave them alone, and leave alone what they busy themselves with. You will come to a people who will bring you vessels in which are varieties of food; if you eat anything\textsuperscript{91} from [those dishes], mention the name of God over them. You will meet a people who have shaven the middle of their head and have left around it [a ring of hair] like turbans;\textsuperscript{92} tap them lightly with the sword. Go ahead, in God’s name; may God make you perish through wounds and plague!\textsuperscript{93}

\textsuperscript{88} Reference to the steps or stages to, and the beautiful companions in, paradise.

\textsuperscript{89} That is, Usāmah allowed ‘Umar to remain behind with Abū Bakr in Medina, rather than marching on the campaign.

\textsuperscript{90} Al-Ṣan’ānī, V, 199–200 [no. 9375], has “people who allege that they imprison themselves” [i.e., as monks, for God].

\textsuperscript{91} The text reads \textit{shay’an ba’da shay’in “something after something,” but this may be a conflation of two separate variant readings: shay’an “a thing” and ba’da shay’in “some thing.”}

\textsuperscript{92} Reference to a monk’s tonsure.

\textsuperscript{93} The text is difficult; Ibn al-Athīr’s version, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 336, is identical, and both are closely paralleled by Ṣan’ānī, V, 199–200 [no. 9375]. Although these passages are in substantial agreement that Muslims should smite shaven-headed monks with the sword, they do not fit the larger context of the accounts in which they occur, in which Abū Bakr warns the Muslim warriors not to abuse certain categories of people, including monks in their cells, thus directly contradicting the passage in question. Ṣan’ānī, V, 200 [no. 9377]:—Ma’mar—al-Zuhri], may preserve a more accurate version: “You will find people who have shaved their heads with the sword, and those who lock themselves up in cells: leave them alone in their sins.” The sentence about wounds and plague, missing
According to al-Sari—Shu’ayb—Sayf; and according to ‘Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf—Hishām b. ‘Urwh—his father:94 Abū Bakr went out to al-Jurf and followed Usāmah and sent him off.
He asked Usāmah for ‘Umar [b. al-Khattāb], which he agreed to.
He told Usāmah, “Do what the Prophet of God ordered you to do: Begin with the Quddā’ah95 country, then go to Abil.96 Do not fall short in anything that the Apostle of God commanded, but do not hurry because of what you have not [yet] attained of his injunction.” So Usāmah advanced quickly to Dhu al-Marwah97 and the valley98 and ended up doing what the Prophet had ordered him to do by way of dispersing horsemen among the Quddā’ah tribes and raiding Abil. He took captives and booty, and his completion [of the mission] was within forty days, excepting [the time of] his encampment and his return.99

According to al-Sarī b. Yahyā—Shu’ayb—Sayf; and according to ‘Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf—Mūsā b. ‘Uqbah—al-Mughi-

95. A group of tribes living north of Medina as far as Syria, including Juhayna, ‘Udhrah, Balī, Bahrayn, Bal-Qayn, Tanūkh, Salīh, and Sa’d
Hudhaym, as well as Nahd and Jarm in South Arabia and ‘Umān. See Ef2, s.v.
“Kudā’a” [M. J. Kister]; Caskel, II, 470.
96. Diyarbakri, II, 154; Wāqīdī, Maghāzī, 1117ff.; and Yāqūt, s.v. “Ubnā” call this place Ubnā. De Goeje argued that the name Ubnā was a corruption of Ābil, referring to the ancient town of Abila in Gualanitis: Ibn Rustaḥ [BGA, VII], 329 note c. Robert Schick, The Fate of the Christians of Palestine, s.v. “Ābil,” cites Tabari, I, 2081, which places Ābil in association with Zīzā’ and Qaṣṭal during the conquest of the Balqā’ region of Syria; on this basis he argues that Ābil in these accounts of the conquest is not Abila at all but a corruption of Arabic Ubnā, which he therefore localizes near the other two places, just south of modern 97. A village in Wādi al-Qurā “the valley of villages,” north of Medina [Yāqūt, s.v. “al-Marwah”].
98. Presumably Wādi al-Qurā.
99. Diyarbakri, II, 155: Usāmah raids Quddā’ah as far as Mu’tah, then raids people of Ubnā, takes booty and captives; kills the killer of his father, Zayd; and returns within forty days.
rah b. al-Akhnas; and according to the two of them—Sayf—'Amr b. Qays—'Atâ' al-Khurasâni: a similar account.

Remainder of the Account Regarding al-'Ansî the Liar\(^\text{100}\)

According to what we have learned, when Bâdhâm\(^\text{101}\) and the Yemen embraced Islam, the Apostle of God placed in Bâdhâm’s hands the governorship of all the Yemen, putting him in charge of all its districts; and he continued to be the Apostle’s governor all the days of his life. The Apostle did not dismiss him from it or from any part of it, nor did he place in it any associate with him, until Bâdhâm died. After he died, the Apostle divided governorship of the Yemen among a group of his companions.

According to 'Ubaydallâh b. Sa'îd\(^\text{102}\) al-Zuhri—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sârî b. Yahyâ—Shu‘ayb b. Ibrâhîm—Sayf—Saḥîr b. Yusuf—his father—'Ubayd b. Saḥîr b. Lawdhân al-Ansârî al-Salmî (who was one of those whom the Prophet sent with the governors of Yemen):\(^\text{103}\) in the year 10, after he had performed the "completion pilgrimage"\(^\text{104}\) [and after] Bâdhâm had died, the Prophet accordingly divided up his governorship among the following: Shahr b. Bâdhâm, ‘Amîr b. Shahr al-Ham-

---

100. For the beginning of this account, see Tabari, I, 179ff.; tr. I. K. Poonawala, The History of al-Tabari, IX, 164ff. A parallel version of this segment as far as p. 34, is found in Ibn al-Athîr, Kâmîl, II, 336–41; another as far as p. 20, is in Nuwayrî, 50–51. Tabari returns to the 'riddah in Yemen, p. 158, below. The rebel’s cognomen was “al-'Aswâd” (“the black one”); his tribe, ‘Ans b. Mâlik, was a settled tribe of Madhîj living mainly in the northern highlands of Yemen and in part near Najrân; cf. Caskel, II, 190. On his proper name, see note 172, below.

101. One of the Abnâ’ (“sons”), descendants of Persians sent to Yemen around A.D. 570 by the Sasanian king Khusraw Anûshirwân. Balânî, infra, Ibn al-Athîr, Kâmîl; and Ibn al-Athîr, Usd, I, 163, give his name as Bâdhân; Balâdhrî, Futûh, 105ff., has Bâdhâm. On the name (properly Bâdhân) see Justi, 56.

102. See note 53, above.

104. Hijjat al-tâmât, presumably another term for the Prophet’s last pilgrimage of the year A.H. 10, more usually called the “farewell pilgrimage” (hijjat al-wâdh), during which he is reported to have said, “Today I have completed for you your faith.” It is apparently also called “pilgrimage of Islam” (hijjat al-islâm). I thank E. Landau-Tasseron for clarifying the relationship of these terms [personal communication].
The Account Regarding al-'Ansî the Liar

According to 'Ubaydallâh—his uncle—Sayf b. 'Umar—Abû 'Amr, mawlâ of Ibrâhim b. Ṭalhâ—'Ubâdah b. Qurş b. 'Ubâdah b.115 Qurş al-Laythî: The Prophet returned to Medina after completing the pilgrimage of Islam,116 having arranged the government of the Yemen. He divided it among [a number of] men, making each man unchallenged in his territory. He arranged [also] the command of Ḥaḍramawt, dividing it among

---

105. Ibn al-Athîr, Usd, III, 83, says merely that he was a Yemeni tribesman, one of the Prophet’s governors of Yemen, who later settled in al-Kûfâh.
106. Yemeni tribesman who came to the Prophet in 7/628; he later had an important military and political career. See El², s.v. “Al-As‘ârî, Abû Mûsâ” (L. Veccia Vaglieri).
107. An Umayyad of Quraysh, one of the earliest Muslims; the Prophet sent him to Yemen as a collector of taxes with the Yemeni convert Farwah b. Musayk. He later had a controversial military and political career. See El², s.v. “Khalid b. Sa‘îd” (H. Loucel).
108. Son of the Prophet’s first wife, Khadijah, considered a member of the tribe of Tamîm, which was allied with the ‘Abd al-Dâr clan of Quraysh; Ibn al-Athîr, Usd, III, 50. Diyarbakri, II, 153, omits his name from the list.
109. A Tamîmî, ally of the Banû Nawfâl of Quraysh, who embraced Islam at the conquest of Mecca. This passage and another from Sayf [p. 158, below] suggest that he was sent to Yemen by the Prophet, but Ibn al-Athîr, Usd, V, 128–29; Ibn Hajar, Isâbah, s.v.; and even another account by Sayf [Tabarî, I, 2162] suggest that he may not have gone to Yemen until the time of Abû Bakr or ‘Umar.
110. He seems to have been a Khazrajî of Banû al-Naṣîr from Medina; cf. Caskel, I, Table 186, II, 176. However, Ibn al-Athîr, Usd, IV, 98–99, provides several alternative genealogies for him.
112. Other sources add nothing to what is given here by Sayf.
113. Three tribes of Ḥaḍramawt, genealogically subdivisions of Kindah but at this time politically independent; cf. Caskel, I, Table 233, II, 413, 503.
115. Reading ‘îbn for ‘an, following Emendanda.
three [persons], each one of whom he made unchallenged in his territory. Over Najrān\(^{117}\) he appointed 'Amr b. Ḥazm; Khālid b. Sa'īd b. al-‘Āṣ he appointed over what was between Najrān and Rima' and Zabīd;\(^{118}\) ‘Amīr b. Shahr he appointed over Hamdān;\(^{119}\) over Ṣan‘ā', [he placed] Ibn Bādhām; over ‘Akk and the Ash’arīs,\(^{120}\) [he placed] al-Ṭāhir b. Abī Hālah; over Ma’rib,\(^{121}\) [he placed] Abū Mūsā al-Ash’arī; and over al-Janad,\(^{122}\) [he placed] Ya’lā b. Umayyah. Mu’ādh [b. Jabal] was the teacher, who used to make the rounds in the district of each governor of the Yemen and Ḥadramawt.\(^{123}\) And [the Prophet] appointed to the governorships of Ḥadramawt: 'Ukkāshah b. Thawr over the Sakāsik and Sakūn; over Mu‘āwiyah b. Kindah, ‘Abdallāh\(^{124}\) or al-Muhājir,\(^{125}\) who then fell ill and did not go until Abu Bakr sent him;\(^{126}\) and over Ḥadramawt\(^{127}\) [he appointed] Ziyād b.

---

\(^{117}\) An important town on the northern edge of the Yemen, renowned for its Christian population on the eve of Islam; cf. Yāqūt, s.v.

\(^{118}\) Zabīd was the main town of the Yemeni Tihāmah or coastal plain, situated about 100 km north of the Bāb al-Mandāb. According to Baladhuri, \textit{Futūh}, 105, Khālid (or al-Muhājir b. Abī Umayyah?) governed Ṣan‘ā'. Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 336, does not mention Rima', a valley leading down to the Red Sea coast about 20 km north of the city of Zabīd and its valley (cf. Yāqūt, s.v. "Zabīd"); Hamdānī, 71, \textit{TAVO} B VII i; Wilson, 31.

\(^{119}\) Large tribe and territory north of Ṣan‘ā': \textit{EP}², s.v. "Hamdān" (J. Schliefen—W. M. Watt), \textit{TAVO} B VII i.

\(^{120}\) Ash’ar was a tribe of the Tihāmah coastal plain located between Mukhāh (Mocha) and Zabīd; ‘Akk lived in the Tihāmah north of Ash’ar. Cf. Caskel, II, 150, 200; \textit{EP}, s.v. "Akk" [W. Caskel].

\(^{121}\) Important town on the eastern desert edge of the Yemeni highlands, ca. 140 km due east of Ṣan‘ā’ [\textit{TAVO} B VII i]; in antiquity the capital of the kingdom of Saba’ (Sheba).

\(^{122}\) Large town in Yemen about 200 km due south of Ṣan‘ā’ and, with Ṣan‘ā’ and Ḥadramawt, normally one of the three administrative seats of southwestern Arabia [Yāqūt, s.v.].

\(^{123}\) I.e., to teach Qur’ān and prayer?

\(^{124}\) Wellhausen, \textit{Skizzen}, VI, 146, proposed that this was Abū Mūsā al-Ash’arī; note, however, that Abū Mūsā figures as governor of Ma’rib in the immediately preceding list.

\(^{125}\) Baladhuri, \textit{Futūh}, 105, identifies this as al-Muhājir b. Abī Umayyah; he was of the Makhzūm clan of Quraysh and full brother of the Prophet’s wife Umm Salamah (Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Usd}, IV, 322–23).

\(^{126}\) Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 336–37, suggests that this refers to the Prophet’s illness, having delayed the dispatch of the governor.

\(^{127}\) I.e., over the valley of Ḥadramawt proper, as opposed to the whole province of the same name!
Labid al-Bayāḍī, who assumed [also] the governorate of al-Muhājjir. So, when the Apostle of God died, these were his governors over the Yemen and Ḥadramawt, excepting those who had been killed in fighting al-Aswād or had [otherwise] died—those being Bādhām, who died and because of [whose death] the Prophet divided up his governorate, and his son Shahr b. Bādhām, against whom al-Aswād marched to fight him, killing him. This account was [also] related to me according to al-Sarī—Shuʿayb b. Ibrāhīm—Sayf—Abū ʿAmr, mawlā of Ibrāhīm b. Ṭahlah; then the rest of the account was according to his isnād like the account of Ibn Saʿīd al-Zuhri.

According to al-Sarī—Shuʿayb b. Ibrāhīm—Sayf—Ṭahlah b. al-ʿAlām—Ikrimah—Ibn ʿAbbās: The first ones who resisted al-ʿAnsī and tried to match his numbers were Āmīr b. Shahr al-Hamdānī, in his district, and Fayrūz and Dādhawayh in their districts. Then there followed those who had been assigned commands.

According to ʿUbaydallāh b. Saʿīd—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sarī—Shuʿayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—his father—ʿUbayd b. Ṣakhir: While we were in al-Janad, having laid out for them what [conditions] were necessary and having drawn up agreements between us, a letter arrived from al-Aswād. [It said:] “Oh you who are marching against us: Grasp firmly against us that which you have taken of our land, and hold back that which you have gathered, for we are more entitled to it, as long as you are [in the situation] you are.” So we asked the messenger from where he had come. He replied:
“From the cave of Khubbān.” Then he directed himself toward Najrān until he took it ten [days] after coming out [in rebellion], and the bulk of Madhhij submitted to him. So, while we were taking care of our business and gathering our force, someone came to us and said, “This al-Aswad is in Sha‘ūb.” Shahr b. Bādhām had gone out against him twenty days after the beginning [of his revolt], and while we were awaiting the news of who would be defeated, we learned that [al-Aswad] had killed Shahr and routed the Abnā’ and taken possession of Ṣa‘nā’, twenty-five days from his uprising. Mu‘ādh [b. Jabal] fled until he passed by Abū Mūsā while he was in Ma‘rib, and the two then rushed to Ḥadramawt. Mu‘ādh settled among the Sakūn, and Abū Mūsā among the Sakāsik that are adjacent to al-Mufawwur, with the desert between them and Ma‘rib. The other commanders withdrew to al-Ṭāhir [b. Abī Hālah], except for ‘Amr and Khālid, who returned to Medina. Al-Ṭāhir at that time was in the midst of the ‘Akk country, facing Ṣa‘nā’. Al-Aswad subdued [the territory] between Ṣayhād—the desert of Ḥadramawt—to the province of al-Ṭā'īf [to the north], to al-Bahrayn in the direction of Aden. The Yemen submitted to him, while the 'Akk in the Tihamah were resisting him, and [his movement] began to advance like wildfire. The day he met Shahr [in battle] he had with him seven hundred horsemen, in addition to the camel riders; his commanders were Qays b. 'Abd Yaghūth al-Murādī, Mu‘āwiyyah b. Qays al-Janbī, Yazid b. M.h.r.m., Yazid b. Ḥusayn al-Hārīthī, and Yazid b. al-Afkal al-Azdi. His rule became stable; his order was considered harsh. Some of the coastal districts submitted to him—Jāzān [and] 'Athr and al-Sharjah and al-Hīrdah and Ghalafigah and Aden; and al-Janad where Sayf describes "s.h.y.d" as "the desert between Ma‘rib and Ḥadramawt"—i.e., Sayhad. Cf. Hamdānī, index; and Ibn Manẓūr, III, 260.

144. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 146, notes that no place named al-Bahrayn is known in the region of Aden. There seems to be some problem with the text here. Perhaps it read "to al-Bahrayn and in the direction of Aden," so that al-Bahrayn could be taken to refer to the well-known district of that name in eastern Arabia, for the sentence seems at this point to be enumerating regions beyond the Yemen highlands that were following al-Aswād. Cf. Nuwayri, 50, who states that al-Aswād overcame the area from Ṣan‘ā’ to ‘Umn to al-Ṭā‘īf—i.e., the whole southern half of the Arabian peninsula. Cf. also note 148, below. Although in Islamic times the term "al-Bahrayn" came to be used for the whole east Arabian littoral from the head of the Persian Gulf to ‘Umn, in earlier usage it referred to the largest oasis cluster of northeastern Arabia, ca. 60 km inland from the coast near the modern country called al-Bahrayn. Its main center was the oasis of Ḥajar. Cf. Thilo, s.v. "Bahrayn"; Wustenfeld, "Bahrein und Jemāma," 175–76.

145. Originally of the tribe of Bajilah, but an ally of the Murād clan of Madhhihī, for whom he became an important warrior. There is confusion about his name, which sometimes appears as Qays b. Hubayrā "al-Makshūb," Qays b. Ḥaz‘ū‘āb Yaghūth b. Makshūb, or more commonly, simply Qays b. al-Makshūb: cf. Balādhurī, Futūḥ, 105–6; Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 337; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 222, 227–28, p. 165; and Emendanda, where Qays b. Makshūb b. Ḥaz‘ū‘āb Yaghūth is proposed.

146. Caskel, II, 257, lists Janb as a group of Madhhihī living near modern Khāmis Mushayt.

147. I have found no other references to any of these three Yazids.

148. Text has "Ḥāz‘ Athr." These places were along the Red Sea coast north of Aden, as mentioned in Hamdānī, 52, ll. 9–15, which even offers them in the same sequence [in reverse] and clarifies that "Ḥāz‘" and 'Athr [also 'Athtar; cf. Hamdānī, 54 l. 11 and index] are two places. There were several places named Ḥāz‘, Ḥazzah, etc., in Yemen; they seem to have been situated in the mountains, not along the coast, but their names may have caused a copyist to corrupt the name Jāzān to "Ḥāz‘." Cf. Hamdānī, index, s.v. "Ḥāz‘" [there misprinted as "Jāz‘"]!]; Wilson, 125–26. On Jāzān [modern Jizān or Jayzān, in southern Saudi Arabia] see ElP, s.v. "Djayzān" (G. Rentz).
and then Ṣanʿāʾ to the province of al-Ṭāʾif [and] to al-Aḥsiyāh and Ṣulayb. The Muslims dealt with him out of fear; the apostates dealt with him out of disbelief and turning back from Islam. His lieutenant among Madhhij was 'Amr b. Maʿdikarib. He based his command on a group of warriors; as for the command of his army, it was in the hands of Qays b. 'Abd Yaghūth, and he put command of the Abnāʾ in charge of Fayruz and Dādhawayh. Then, after he had made much slaughter in the land, he made light of Qays and Fayruz and Dādhawayh and married the wife of Shahr, who was Fayruz’s niece. [In Ḥadramawt] we were on the verge of Muʿadh’s marriage into the Banū Bakr, a clan of Sakūn, to a woman named Ramlah, whose maternal uncles were the Banū Zankil, so that they had become fond of us because of his kinship [with them]. Muʿadh admired her greatly; indeed he used to say when he prayed to God, “Oh God, raise me up on Judgment Day with the Sakūn,” and sometimes, “Oh God, be forgiving to

149. This toponym was unknown to Hamdānī; Yāqūt knew of it directly from accounts of the riddah and related that, when al-Aswad expelled the Prophet’s governors in Yemen, Farwah b. Musayk, who had been the Prophet’s governor over the Murād clan, set up camp in al-Aḥsiyāh. This part of the text, however, is suspiciously similar to a passage several lines earlier that also begins with the phrase “to the province of al-Ṭāʾif” [cf. note 144, above]; one wonders whether the otherwise unknown “al-Aḥsiyāh” is not actually a copyist’s error for al-
Aḥsāʾ, the oasis district in the region of al-Bahrayn, and whether Ṣulayb—the localization of which was evidently a problem for the geographers (see note 150, below)—is not an erroneous reading of ‘Adn/Aden. Or should we, following the principle of lectio difficilior, propose that the errors proceeded the other way around, so that al-Aḥsiyāh and Ṣulayb came to be misread as al-Aḥsāʾ (then revised to al-Bahrayn) and Aden? In any case, the possibility that one of these phrases represents a dittography should be noted.

150. Apparently a place in the Tiḥāmah [Yāqūt, s.v.] or in the Sarāt mountains north of Yemen [Hamdānī, 181 ll. 12ff.], perhaps as far north as Mecca or Medina. Nuwayrī, 52, has “and elsewhere” [wa-ghayrihd].

151. Reading taqiyya, with Emendanda, for baqiyya in the text and Nuwayrī.

152. Leading chief, warrior, and poet of the Zubayd clan of Madhhij, said to have embraced Islam in Medina shortly before the Prophet’s death; cf. EI2 s.v. “ʿAmr b. Maʿdikarib” (C. Pellat); Caskel, II, 178.

153. Cf. Diyarbakri, II, 156 ll. 11–12; Balansi, 151: al-Aswad marries the wife of Shahr’s father, Bādhān.

154. At this point an enormous sentence has been broken into several parts in the translation and the clauses rearranged.

155. Thus the text, but probably Zankibil; cf. Caskel, II, 605.
The Account Regarding al-'Anṣī the Liar

Sakûn." While we were in this state in Ḥadramawt and not free from fear that al-Aswad might march against us or send an army against us, or that some rebel might arise in Ḥadramawt demanding what al-Aswad demanded, lo and behold, letters reached us from the Prophet. In them he commanded us to send men to seek out [al-Aswad] by deceit, or to assault him [openly], and to tell about that, on the Prophet's behalf, everyone who desired anything from him. Mu'ādh accordingly undertook what he was ordered to do, so that we grew powerful and became confident of victory.

According to al-Sari—Shu'ayb—Sayf; and according to 'Ubayd- allâh—his uncle—Sayf—al-Mustanir b. Yazid—'Urwa b. Ghaziyyah al-Dathimi—al-Dâhâk b. Fayruz; and according to al-Sari—Jushaysh; b. al-Daylami; and according to 'Ubaydallâh b. Jushaysh b. al-Daylami. Wabr b. Yuḥannis came to us with the Prophet's letter, in which he ordered us to stand firm in our religion and to rise up in war and to take action against al-Aswad either by stealth or by brute force. [And he ordered] that we inform on his behalf anyone whom we thought to be of help and obedient, so we did accordingly, and we saw that the matter was difficult. And we saw that [al-Aswad] was resentful toward Qays b. 'Abd Yaghuth, who was in command of his army. So we said [to ourselves] that [Qays] would be in fear for his life, so he would be ready to be invited [to join our cause], so we invited him, telling him of the matter and informing him on the Prophet's behalf. It was as if we had descended upon him from heaven while he was in perplexity and sadness over his situation, so he responded [affirmatively] to what we wished in 158. One of the Abnâ' who embraced Islam; cf. Ibn Sa'd, V, 388-89, Ibn al-Athir, Usd, V, 83; Balansi, 152; Ibn Ḥajar, Isâbah, s.v. His name (Wabr or Wabar or Wabrah?) and exact identity are somewhat confused.

---

159. Or, possibly, "in our obedience": dîn.

160. Lit., "by clashing."

161. Fa-huwa la-awwalu da'watu.
that. Wabr b. Yuhannis came to us, and we wrote to the people calling them [to Islam].

Satan told [al-Aswad] something [about this], so he sent to Qays and said, “Oh Qays, [do you know] what this one [i.e., Satan] is saying?” [Qays] said, “[No.] what is he saying?” [Al-Aswad] replied, “He is saying [to me], ‘You relied on Qays and honored him, to the point that he had your complete trust and had become like you in power. Then he inclined toward your enemy and schemed after your kingship and because of treachery determined that he would say, ‘Oh Aswad, oh Aswad, shame, shame!’ Pluck the top of him and take from Qays his highest part; if not he will dispossess you or pluck the top of you.’” At this Qays, swearing a [false] oath, said—“Oh Dhū al-Khimār, you are too important to me and too illustrious that I should be envious of you.” Whereupon [al-Aswad] said, “How crude of you! Do you [dare] call the angel a liar? The angel spoke the truth; now I know that you have repented because of what [Satan] made known about you.”

Then [Qays] went out and, coming to us, said, “Oh Jushaysh and Fayrūz and Dādhawayh, there were words between us; what is [your] opinion?” So we said, “We should be wary.” We were in that [state] when [al-Aswad] sent to us, saying, “Did I not honor you above [others in] your tribes? Did [Satan] not keep me informed about you?” To this we said, “Forgive us this time.” Whereupon he replied, “Don’t let me hear [anything] about you or I shall kill you.”

---

162. Lit., “entered every entering from you.” This whole passage, with its quotation within a quotation, is awkward to render.
163. Or perhaps “you prick, you prick”; yā saw’ah yā saw’ah.
164. I.e., Satan tells al-Aswad to behead Qays before Qays beheads him. Cf. note 174, below.
165. The text has “By Dhū al-Khimār,” but Dhū al-Khimār, “the one with the veil,” was the nickname of al-Aswad himself [see Baladhuri, Futūḥ, 105], and it seems unlikely that Qays would have sworn an oath on his name. However, making this emendation removes from the sentence the formal oath, which the context requires. Perhaps the original was “By God, Oh Dhū al-Khimār.”
166. Al-Aswad here refers to Satan as his “angel.” One wonders if the text might originally have had malīk, “king”, instead of malak or malak (“angel”).
in doubt over our situation and that of Qays, and we were in doubt and great danger. Then [news] reached us of the opposition against him on the part of 'Amir b. Shahr and Dhū Zūd and Dhū Murrān and Dhū al-Kalā' and Dhū Zulaym;\(^{168}\) they wrote to us and offered us help, and we wrote back to them and instructed them not to put anything in motion until we should arrange the matter thoroughly. They only became agitated over that when the letter of the Prophet arrived. The Prophet wrote to the people of Najrān, to their Arabs and to the non-Arab inhabitants of the country, so they stood firm and regrouped\(^{169}\) and gathered in a single place. Learning of that, (al-Aswad) sensed disaster. We hatched a plan, and accordingly I went to visit Æzād, (al-Aswad's) wife,\(^{170}\) saying to her, "Oh my cousin, you know the misfortune this man represents for your people; he has killed your husband, made excessive slaughter among your people, humiliated those who remained of them, and disgraced the women. So might you have some conspiracy against him?" At this she replied, "To what end?" I said, "To expel him." She added, "Or to kill him?" I replied, "Or to kill him." She said, "Yes, by God. God has created no one more hateful to me than he is. He does not attend to what is right [even] for the sake of God, nor does he refrain from what is forbidden\(^{171}\) for His sake. So when you have resolved [what to do], let me know so that I may inform you of how this may be \(168.\) Cf. p. 165, below. These are all epithets used as names, evidently referring to South Arabian chiefs. 'Umyr "Dhū Murrān" was a chief of Hamdān who had had written contact with the Prophet (Hamdānī, 99 ll. 4–5; cf. Harding, 542, on the name DMRN in Minaean inscriptions); Dhū al-Kalā' was the most powerful tribe of South Arabia on the eve of Islam, probably represented here by its chief, Samayfa' b. Nākūr "Dhū al-Kalā' al-Asghar" (Caskel, II, 236, 510); Dhū Zulaym was a clan of the Alhān b. Mālik tribe that lived southwest of Ṣan'a', probably represented here by its chief Hawshab b. Yazīd (Caskel, II, 152, 322). I could find nothing on Dhū Zūd besides the reference on p. 165, below.

\[^{1858}\]

\(^{169.}\) Lit., "turned aside."

\(^{170.}\) Azād or Azadh had been the wife of Shahr b. Bādhām and was the cousin of Fayruz; Ibn al-Athīr, Usād, III, 6, s.v. "Shahr b. Bādhām." Her name is Iranian (< Azāta "free, noble"); cf. Justi, 54.

accomplished." And so I was going out, [when] all of a sudden there were Fayruz and Dādhwāyh waiting for me. Qays came, and we wanted to rise against [al-Aswād], but then a man [arrived and] said to [Qays], before he could sit with us, "The king summons you." Accordingly [Qays] entered with ten [men] of Madhhīj and Hamdān, so that [al-Aswād] was unable to kill him.

According to al-Sāri in his account: Then 'Ayhalah b. Ka'b b. Ghawth\footnote{I.e., al-Aswād. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 336; and Al-Baladhūrī, Futūḥ, 105, state that his proper name was 'Ayhalah, but he was called by his nickname "al-Aswād," "the black," because of his color. Diyārbaḵrī, II, 155; and Nuwayrī, 49, 55 (as well as Tābārī, I, 1795) also have the form 'Abhalah.} said, [or, according to 'Ubaydallāh in his account, "'Abhalah b. Ka'b b. Ghawth said"]\footnote{Text has "Oh 'Ayhalah," so that the subject of "he said" must be someone other than al-Aswād. I have followed the suggestion of Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147, who proposed that the vocative particle "oh" should be dropped, as the context makes it clear that the words spoken immediately after must have been uttered by al-Aswād, not to him.} "Do you fortify yourself against me with men? [i.e., "How dare you fortify yourself against me with men?] Did I not tell you the truth, whereas you lie to me? [Satan] says, 'Shame! shame! If you do not cut the hand from Qays he will cut the heights from your head.'\footnote{Text has *yaqta'u qunnataka al-'ulyā "he will cut off your highest part," i.e., "your head," Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 339, suggests *raqabataka "your neck." Cf. note 164, above.} [He went on like this], until [Qays] thought that [al-Aswād] would kill him. Whereupon [Qays] said, "Indeed, it was not right for me to kill you, as you are an apostle of God, so do with me what you will. As for fear and terror, I am in both of them [anyway], in dread [that you will kill me].\footnote{This emendation is introduced in the Cairo ed. from Nuwayrī.} Kill me, for one death is easier for me than deaths I die every day [or, according to al-Zuhrī: and as for your killing me, one death is easier]." At this, [al-Aswād] took pity on [Qays] and sent him out. So [Qays] came out to us and told us [what had happened] and stayed with us and said, "Do your deed."

[Al-Aswād]\footnote{This seems to be the beginning of another version of the narrative, not very neatly integrated into the story told so far.} came out against us with a group, so we stood at attention for him. [Now] at the gate were one hundred cows and camels, so he stood up and drew a line so that they were situated behind it and he stood before it. Then he cut their throats, [they being] neither corralled nor bound, [but] none of them plunged across the line. Then he let them go, so that they roamed around until they passed away. I have never seen a more repulsive scene than that or a more brutal day. Then he said, "Is what I have learned about you true, Fayruz?" and he pointed the lance at him. "I had intended to cut your throat, making you follow this beast." At this [Fayruz] said, "You chose us to be your in-laws and gave us precedence over the [rest of the] Abnā'. [Even] if you had not been a prophet we would not have sold our share with you for anything; so how [could we reject you], after the promise\textsuperscript{177} of [both] an afterlife and a present life\textsuperscript{178} has been gathered to us by you? You should not believe what you have heard about us, for indeed we are where you wish."\textsuperscript{179} At this [al-Aswad] said, "Divide this, as you are most knowledgeable of whoever is hereabouts." Then the people of Šan'ā' began to gather to me, so I began to order that the slaughtered camels be given to the clan, the cows to the family, and the equipment to the needy,\textsuperscript{180} until the people of each district\textsuperscript{181} had taken their share. Then, before he reached his house—while he was watching me\textsuperscript{182}—a man overtook him who denounced Fayruz to him. [Al-Aswad] was listening closely to him, and Fayruz overheard him while he was saying, "I will kill him tomorrow with his companions, so come to me early in the morning." Then [al-Aswad] turned and, lo and behold, there was [Fayruz]. So he said [to the man], "Shhh!"\textsuperscript{183} Then [Fayruz] informed him of what he had done [by way of distributing the meat], at which [al-Aswad] said, "Excellent work." Then [al-Aswad] struck his riding animal and went in. [Fayruz] returned \textsuperscript{177} Lit., "matter" [\textit{amr}].

\textsuperscript{178} Nuwayri, \textit{55}, has "a faith" [\textit{dinan}].
\textsuperscript{179} I.e., our loyalties are with you.
\textsuperscript{180} The three terms are \textit{raḥt} [clan], \textit{ahl al-bayt} [family], and \textit{ahl al-khallah} [needy], respectively. Nuwayri, \textit{56}, and Cairo edition, following Kosegarten, read "people of the settlements" [\textit{ahl al-hillah}].
\textsuperscript{181} Nāhiyah.
\textsuperscript{182} Or "standing over me" [\textit{wa-huwa wāqifun 'alayya}].
\textsuperscript{183} Or "hold it!" [\textit{mah!}]. Alternatively, we might construe this as "So he said [to Fayruz], 'Yes?'" as seems to be suggested by Wellhausen, \textit{Skizzen}, VI, 147.
to us and told us the news. At this we sent to Qays, [telling him] that he should come to us. Together they agreed that I should return to the woman to inform her of our decision, so she might tell us what she would order [us to do]. So I went to the woman and said, "What do you think?" She replied, "He is cautious and [closely] guarded. Every part of the palace is surrounded by the guard, except this room; the rear of it is at such-and-such a place on the street, so, when evening has come, break into it; you will then be inside the guard, and nothing will stand in the way of killing him." Then she said, "In [the room] you will find a lamp and weapons." Then I went out; but, when al-Aswad met me coming out of one of his residences, he said to me, "What are you doing here?" and slapped my head so [hard] that I fell down, for he was powerfully built. The woman screamed so that he was startled away from me; but for that he would have killed me. She said, "My cousin came to visit me, but you have treated me meanly!" At this he said, "Shut up, you nobody! I hereby give him to you." So she spared me. So I came to my companions, saying, "Help! Get away!" and I told them the news. We were in this state, confused, when all of a sudden [the woman's] messenger came to me, [saying], "Don't give up what you were going to do when I left you, for I will continue to be with him until he goes to sleep." So we said to Fayruz, "Go to her and make sure of her. As for me, there is no way for me to enter after being thrown out [by al-Aswad]." He did so; he was more clever than I. So after she had informed him [of the

184. Lit., "their council agreed."
185. Lit., "What brought you to visit me?"
186. Or, "You bastard!" lit., "May you have no father!"
187. Fa-taẓāyala ʿannī. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147, proposed that the text should read fa-ṭaẓāyala, with al-Aswad as the subject; De Goeje, Glossary, wished to leave the text unchanged and proposed that it meant "she hid herself from me." The act of handing a captive over to a petitioner who had requested him was a common gesture of magnanimity among chiefs of pre-Islamic and early Islamic Arabia. The idea was that the petitioner could decide the captive's fate—either to free him, as in this instance, or to inflict a more hideous punishment on him than the king might have, in the case of a captive who was a personal enemy of the petitioner.
188. The following eight sentences are omitted from Nuwayrī, 56.
189. Lit., "there is no way for me to enter after the prohibition [al-nahy]."
The Account Regarding al-'Ansi the Liar

plan], he said,190 "And how may we break into lined rooms?"191 [She replied,192] "We must remove the lining of the room." So the two of them entered and removed the lining, whereupon they locked it and he sat with her as if he were a visitor. Then [al-Aswad] came to visit her and became consumed with jealousy, but she explained to him [Fayruz's] kinship and foster-relationship with her [and that] he was within the forbidden degrees of consanguinity.193 At this, [al-Aswad] screamed at him and threw him out, and he brought us the news. When it was evening we put our plan into effect, our partisans having agreed with us [beforehand]. We went ahead before making contact with the Hamdânis and Himyaris194 and broke into the room from the outside. Then we entered and in it was a lamp under a large bowl. We protected ourselves [by letting] Fayruz, who was the bravest and strongest of us, [go first]195 and said: "Look [and see] what you can see." So he went out, while we were between [al-Aswad] and the guards that were with him in the compound. When [Fayruz] got near the door of the room, he heard a loud snoring, and, lo, there was the woman, sitting up. Then, when [Fayruz] stood by the door, Satan made [al-Aswad] sit up and address him with his tongue. He was snoring as he sat and also saying, "I have nothing to do with you, oh Fayruz!" At this [Fayruz] feared that if he went back he and the woman would be 190. Cairo ed. has "she said"; this change would eliminate the need for the emendation introduced later in the sentence [see Note 192, below).

191. Buyût mubattanah, i.e., rooms having a bitânah, or "lining"; cf. next two sentences. The meaning is obscure. E. Landau-Tasseron suggests that this reference may be to a tent, in which case bitânah means an inner divider or wall hanging, but the general sense of the paragraph is that the house was one with solid walls. Perhaps it is simply a way of saying the "inner sanctum" or personal chambers of the ruler in a palace complex; cf. The Assyrian Dictionary, II, s.v. "bitânu." The root b-t-n does not seem to be attested in the Sabaic or Sabaean dialect of Old South Arabic.

192. This addition was suggested by Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147. Cf. note 190, above.

193. I.e., closely enough related to her so that they could not marry, meaning that he was formally a part of her family and could visit her without arousing suspicion or causing disgrace.

194. Himyar b. 'Amir was a large South Arabian nation or tribe that had provided the last Yemeni dynasty of rulers. Cf. Caskel, II, 324.

195. Ittaqaynâ bi-Fayruz; translation following Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147.
killed. So he acted first and came on him [from behind as if to mount him] like a camel. He took his head and killed him by breaking his neck and placing his knee on his back and breaking it. Then he got up to go out. At this the woman, thinking that he had not killed him, took hold of his robe saying, “Why are you leaving me?” [Fayruz] replied, “To inform my companions of his death.” Then [Fayruz] came to us, and we went off with him wishing to cut off [al-Aswad’s] head, but Satan made him move, tossing about so that [Fayruz] could not restrain him. Whereupon I said, “[All of you] sit on his chest.” So two [of us] sat on his chest, and the woman took hold of his hair. We heard a muttering noise, so I bridled him with a rag, and [Fayruz] passed the knife over his gullet. At this he bellowed, like the loudest bellowing of a bull that I have ever heard, so that the guards hurried to the door—they were around the compound—and said, “What’s this? What’s this?” Whereupon the woman replied, “It is the prophet, receiving revelations.” Then he passed away.

We stayed up all night discussing among ourselves how to notify our supporters, there being none other [present] than the three of us—Fayruz, Dādhawayh, and Qays. Consequently we agreed to give our war cry that we had with our supporters, and then to make the call to prayer. When the dawn appeared, therefore, Dādhawayh called out the war cry, terrifying [both] the Muslims and the unbelievers. The guards [of al-Aswad] gathered, surrounding us; then I gave the call to prayer. Their horsemen gathered to the guards, so I called out, “I bear witness that Muhammad is the Apostle of God and that ‘Abhalah is a

196. The verb *khala*tà here means “to approach from the rear,” as animals do when copulating. The text reads, literally, “he approached him, while he was like the camel.”
197. Lit., “where.”
198. I.e., held him by his head.
199. Or perhaps “Then he calmed down,” i.e., ceased bellowing, but the context makes it clear that he died at this time. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 340, has “they [i.e., the guards] settled down.”
200. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147, remarked that this passage makes clear that the original version of the story was not narrated by Jushaysh [cf. p. 25, above].
The Account Regarding al-‘Ansi the Liar

liar," and we threw his head to them. Then Wabr performed the ritual prayer. The men [of al-Aswad] launched an attack, so we called out, "Oh people of Şan‘ā’, whoever has [one of al-Aswad’s men] as a visitor, take hold of him, and whoever [of you] has one of them with him, take hold of him." And I called out to whoever was in the street, "Seize whomever you can." [But] then [al-Aswad’s men also] snatched up many boys and seized [things]. Then they departed, going out [of the city]; but, when they emerged, seventy of their horsemen and [camel] riders were missing, and lo! the townspeople202 had brought them to us. [For our part,] we were missing seven hundred household members. Then we wrote to each other, [agreeing] that they should leave for us what they held and that we should leave for them what we held. So they did this, leaving [Şan‘ā’] without winning anything from us. Then they returned to [the region] between Şan‘ā’ and Najrān. Şan‘ā’ and al-Janad became clear [of them], and God made Islam and its people strong.

We contended among ourselves over [who should] command. The companions of the Prophet returned one by one to their governorates, whereupon we agreed that Mu‘adh b. Jabal [should hold authority];203 he had used to lead us in prayer. We wrote to the Apostle of God with the news—that was during the lifetime of the Prophet. The news reached him the same day;204 [subsequently] our messengers arrived, but the Prophet had died the morning of that day, so Abū Bakr replied to us.

According to ‘Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Abū al-Qāsim al-Shanawi—al-‘Alā’ b. Ziyād—Ibn ‘Umar:205 The news reached the Prophet from heaven on the night in which [al-Aswad] al-‘Ansi was killed, that he might bring us the good tidings, so he said, "Al-‘Ansi was killed [1863]

202. Lit., "people of the houses and streets."
203. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 340–41; Kosegarten; and Manuscript C add "bi-al-khabar" or "bi-khabarihi," suggesting that the agreement was to let Mu‘adh carry the news of the death of al-Aswad to the Prophet. However, two accounts later Mu‘adh is clearly still in Şan‘ā’, not a messenger.
204. I.e., the news reached the Prophet miraculously on the same day as al-Aswad’s death; see next account. In this passage laylah "night" has been translated as "day" because the traditional unit of a day in Arabia began with sundown and was called "a night."
last night; a blessed man of a blessed family killed him." He was asked, "And who [is this]?” He replied, "Fayruz gained the victory, Fayruz.”

According to 'Ubaydallah—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sari—Shu'ayb—Sayf—al-Mustanir—'Urwah—al-Dahhak—Fayruz:206 We killed al-Aswad, and our affairs returned to what they had been, except that we sent to Mu'adh [b. Jabal], coming to mutual agreement upon him [as commander]. So he used to lead us in prayer in Ṣan`ā’. We had [high] hopes and expectations, as there remained nothing that displeased us except the matter of those horsemen who were going back and forth between us and Najrān; but by God (Mu'adh) only led us in prayer three times, when the news reached us of the Apostle of God’s death; whereupon matters became unsettled and we came to disavow many things we used to acknowledge, and the land became disturbed.

According to al-Sari—Shu'ayb—Sayf—Abū al-Qāsim and Abū Muḥammad—Abū Zur'ah Yaḥyā b. Abī 'Amr al-Shaybānī from the province [jund] of Palestine—'Abdallah b. Fayruz al-Daylami—his father: The Prophet sent them an envoy named Wabr b. Yuḥannis al-Azdi, who resided with Dadhawayh al-Fārisī. Now al-Aswad was a soothsayer who had Satan with him and followed him; so he rebelled and fell upon the king of Yemen, killing its king and marrying his wife. He ruled the Yemen. Bādhām had died before that, leaving his son in charge of his affairs; so [al-Aswad] killed him and married [his wife].207 At this, Dādhawayh and Qays b. Makshūh al-Murādī and I met with Wabr b. Yuḥannis, the envoy of the Prophet of God, plotting to kill al-Aswad. Subsequently al-Aswad ordered the people to gather in an open area of Ṣan`ā’; then he came out so that he stood in their midst, [carrying] with him the javelin of the king. Then he called for the king’s horse; and he speared it in the mouth with the javelin and then let it go, so that [the horse] began to run loose in the city as it bled, until it died. [Then] he stood up in the midst of the open area and called for sacrificial 207. The confused syntax and evident repetitions suggest that two or more separate accounts have been combined here. Cf. Caetani, 680–85.

camels from behind the line, \textsuperscript{208} whereupon he made them stand with their necks and heads behind the line but not crossing it. Then he met them with his javelin, slitting their throats so that they scattered from him until he was done with them.\textsuperscript{209} Then he seized his javelin in his hand, then fell upon the earth in a fit and, raising his head, said that he (that is, his Satan, who was with him) [had told him], “Ibn Makshūḥ is one of the oppressors, oh Aswad; cut off his head.”\textsuperscript{210} Then he cast his head [down] again to contemplate [and] then raised his head and said that [his Satan] had said, “Ibn al-Daylami is one of the oppressors, oh Aswad; cut off his right hand and his right leg.” Now, when I heard him say that, I said [to myself], “By God, I have no surety but that he might call for me so he could slaughter me with his javelin just as he slaughtered these sacrificial camels.” So I began to hide myself among the people lest he see me, until I went out not knowing in my alarm how I should set out. Then, when I approached my house, one of his people met me and struck me on the neck, saying, “The king summons you, and you sneak off! Go back!” and made me return. When I saw that, I was afraid that he would kill me.

Now hardly ever was any man of us without his dagger, so I slipped my hand in my boot to take hold of my dagger. Then I approached [al-Aswad], wishing to attack him by stabbing him with it until I killed him, and then to kill those with him. But when I drew near him, he saw evil in my face and said, “Stay where you are!” so I stopped. Then he said, “You are the most important of those in this place and the most knowledgeable about the notables of its people, so divide these sacrificial camels among them.” \textsuperscript{[1865]} Then he mounted and left, so I commenced dividing the meat among the people of Ṣan‘ā’. Whereupon the one who had struck me on the neck came and said, “Give me some of it.” But I said, “No, by God, not one bit. Aren’t you the one who struck me on the neck?” At this he went away angry, so that he came to al-Aswad and informed him of [the treatment] he endured from me and what I had said to him. So, when I had finished, I came to al-Aswad; walking toward him, I overheard the man complaining to him about me, whereupon al-Aswad said to him, "Verily by God I shall slaughter him." Then I said to him, "I have finished what you ordered me to do and have distributed [the meat] among the people." He said, "You have done well" and withdrew; so I left. Then we sent to the king’s wife, [saying], "We wish to kill al-Aswad; how [would it be possible] for us [to do so]?" So she sent to me, [saying], "Come on." So I went to her, and she put the servant girl at the door to let us know if [al-Aswad] was coming; and the two of us entered the other house and then dug until we had penetrated [the wall]. Then we came out into the house, letting the curtain drop down; so I said, "Indeed, we shall kill him this very night." Then [the servant girl] said, "Come on!" Then, before I realized it, there was al-Aswad; he had entered the house, and there he was with us; whereupon violent jealousy took hold of him, so that he began to strike my neck. I kept him away from me and went out to bring my companions [news] of what I had done. I was sure that our scheme against him was undone; [but] then the messenger of the woman came to us [with her message]: "[Al-Aswad] has not disrupted your plot at all, as long as you are [still] considering [it]. For, after you went out, I said to him, 'Don’t you people allege that you are generous and possessors of noble deeds?' He said, 'Of course.' So I said, 'My brother came to greet me and to honor me, and then you fell upon him, striking his neck until you expelled him. So that was your generosity toward him?' And I kept heaping blame on him until he came to blame himself and said, 'He is your brother?' So I told him, 'Yes.' At this he said, 'I didn’t realize [that].' So come tonight when you wish."

\textsuperscript{208} Cf. the account on p. 29, above.

\textsuperscript{209} I.e., presumably those whose throats had been slit ran away from him one by one. Wellhausen, \textit{Skizzen}, VI, 147 proposed “They fell away on both sides of the line until he was done with them.”

\textsuperscript{210} Lit., “cut the top of his head.”

According to al-Daylami: So we were reassured. We agreed to come by night, Dadhawayh and Qays and I, in order to enter the farthest house by the breach that we had made. Whereupon I said, "Oh Qays, you are the hero (fāris) of the Arabs; enter and kill the man." [But] he replied, "Indeed, powerful trembling overcomes me in the face of harm, so that I fear that I might strike him a blow that would avail nothing. But [rather] you enter, oh Fayrūz, for you are the youngest and strongest of us.”

So I laid down my sword with the group and entered to see where the man’s head was. There was the lamp shining, and there he was asleep on some bedspreads. He was hidden in them, and I didn’t know his head from his feet. But there was the woman seated with him; she had been feeding him pomegranate until he fell asleep. So I beckoned to her [to tell me] where his head was, whereupon she pointed to it. Then I began to walk until I stood by his head to see. I don’t know whether I had [yet] looked at his face or not when all of a sudden he had opened his eyes and looked at me. At this I said [to myself], “If I go back [to get] my sword, I fear that he will escape me and get a weapon to ward me off of him.” And lo, his Satan had warned him of my being there and had awakened him, and then when he was slow [to wake up] [his Satan] spoke to me through [al-Aswad’s] tongue; [for] indeed he was looking [at me] and snoring [at the same time]. So I put my two hands forth toward his head, seizing his head with one hand and his beard with the other and then wrenching his neck so that I broke it. Then I went toward my companions, whereupon the woman took hold of my robe, saying, “Your sister! Your advice!” I said, “By God, I have killed him and have given you rest from him.” Then I went to my two companions and told them. They said, “Go back and cut off his head and bring it to us.”

So I entered [again], whereupon he uttered a groan; so I bridled him to cut off his head and took it to the two of them. Then we all went out until we reached our homes. Wabr b. Yuhannis al-Azdī was with us. He remained with us until we ascended one of the elevated fortresses, whereupon Wabr b. Yuhannis uttered the call to prayer. Then we said, “Verily God has killed al-Aswad the liar.” At this the people gathered to us, so we threw his head. When the people who had been with him saw [this], they saddled up their horses. Then each one of them began to take with him one of our boys, from among the families with whom they were staying; I saw them in the dawn making the boys ride behind them. So I called to

---

212. I.e., held his head: aljamtuhu.
my brother, who was below me with the people, "Hold fast to whomever you can of them; don't you see what they are doing with the children?" So they took hold of them, so that we detained seventy of their men. They took thirty boys from us; then, when they came into open country, lo and behold, they were missing seventy men. When they [realized that] they were missing their companions, they came to us saying, "Send our companions to us." So we said to them, "Send our sons to us!" So they sent our sons to us, and we sent their companions to them.

[1868] The Apostle of God said to his companions, "God has killed al-Aswad al-'Ansi the liar; he killed him through the hand of a man who is one of your brethren and of a tribe that embraced Islam and believed [it] to be true." So we were in the same situation we had been in before al-Aswad reached us. The commanders213 came to feel secure, and gradually returned; and the people made excuses for themselves, as only recently they had been in the jahiliyyah.214

According to 'Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sārī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—his father—'Ubayd b. Ṣakhir: From first to last, [al-Aswad's] rule was three months.

According to al-Sārī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf, and according to 'Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf—Jābir b. Yazīd—'Urwah b. Ghaziyyah—al-Dāhhak b. Fayrūz:215 Between his emergence at the cave of Khubbān and his murder there were about four months; he had been concealing his affair before that, until it came out openly afterward.

According to 'Umar b. Shabbāh—'Ali b. Muḥammad—Abū Ma‘shar, Yazīd b. 'Iyād b. Ju‘dubah, Ghassān b. 'Abd al-Ḥamid, and Juwayriyyah b. Asmā—their teachers:216 Abū Bakr sent out the army of Usāmah b. Zayd at the end of Rabi‘ I, and [the news of] the murder of al-'Ansi came at the end of Rabi‘ I, after the departure of Usāmah. That was the first conquest, [news of] which came to Abū Bakr while he was in Medina.

213. Umarā'; i.e., the Prophet's governors.
214. I.e., the age of pre-Islamic heathenism.
According to al-Wāqidi: In this year, that is, year 11, in the [first] half of Muḥarram, the deputation of al-Nakha\(^{217}\) came to the Apostle of God; their leader was Zurārah b. 'Amr. They were the last of the delegations to reach [the Prophet].

In this year the Prophet's daughter Fāṭimah died, on Tuesday, the 3rd of Ramaḍān. At that time she was twenty-nine years old or thereabouts. It is said that this was related on the authority of Abū Bakr b. 'Abdallāh—Ishāq b. 'Abdallāh—Abān b. Šāliḥ. It is alleged that this was related on the authority of Ibn Jurayj—'Amr b. Dinār—Abū Ja'far, who said: Fāṭimah died three months after the Prophet.

According to Ibn Jurayj—al-Zuhri—'Urwah: Fāṭimah died six months after the Prophet. (According to al-Wāqidi, this is the more correct [version].) ‘Alī and Asmā' bt. 'Umayṣ\(^{218}\) washed her [corpse].

According to Abū Zayd—'Alī—Abū Ma'shar: Al-'Abbās and 'Alī and al-Faḍl b. al-'Abbās\(^{220}\) entered her grave.

In this year 'Abdallāh b. Abū Bakr b. Abū Quḥāfah died. An arrow had hit him [when he was] at al-Ṭā'if with the Prophet; it had been shot by Abū Miḥjan.\(^{221}\) The wound healed up until Shawwāl, when it became bad again; subsequently he died.

According to Abū Zayd—'Alī—Abū Ma'shar, Muḥammad b. Ishāq, and Juwayriyyah b. Asmā', in the chain of informants \(^{217}\) Al-Nakha' b. 'Amr, a clan of the tribe of Madḥḥij in southern Yemen. (Caskel, II, 444).

---

\(^{218}\) An early convert to Islam of the Khāṭ'am tribe, married successively to the Prophet's uncle Ḥamzah, to his cousin Ja'far b. Abī Ṭālib, to Abū Bakr, and to 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib; sister of the Prophet's wife Maymūnah bt. al-Ḥārith. (Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Usd}, V, 395).

\(^{219}\) One of the Prophet's uncles, eponym of the Abbasid dynasty.

\(^{220}\) Oldest son of al-'Abbās and hence a cousin of the Prophet; his mother was a sister of the Prophet's wife Maymūnah bt. al-Ḥārith. (Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Usd}, IV, 183).

that I mentioned above.\textsuperscript{222} In the year in which the oath of allegiance was sworn to Abu Bakr, the people of Fars made Yazdagard\textsuperscript{223} king over them.

\textbf{Abu Ja'far said:} In this year occurred the battle between Abu Bakr and Kharijah b. Hišn al-Fazārī.\textsuperscript{224}

According to Abu Zayd-\textquoteright Ali b. Muhammad in their chain of authorities, which I mentioned above:\textsuperscript{225} Abu Bakr remained in Medina after the death of the Apostle of God and after he sent Usamah at the head of his army to where his father, Zayd b. Häritchah,\textsuperscript{226} had been killed in Syria. As it was the place to which the Apostle of God had ordered him to march, \textquoteleft Abu Bakr made no innovation [in doing this]. There had come to him delegations of apostate Arabs, who confirmed [the observance of] prayer but held back [payment of] the alms tax [zakāt]. But Abu Bakr did not accept this from them and sent them back. He remained [in Medina] until Usāmah b. Zayd b. Häritchah arrived forty days after his marching off [some say after seventy days]. Then, when Usāmah b. Zayd had come, he left him in charge of Medina and marched out [some say that he left Sinān al-\textsuperscript{227}Damrah\textsuperscript{228} in charge of Medina]. So he marched and encamped at Dhū al-Qaṣṣah\textsuperscript{229} in Jumādah I [some say Jumādah II]. Now the Apostle of God had sent Nawfal b. Mu\textsuperscript{ā}wiyah al-Dili;\textsuperscript{230} then \textsuperscript{222} Cf. p. 38, above; Caetani, 715.

\textsuperscript{223} The last king of the Sasanian dynasty.

\textsuperscript{224} Leader of the delegation from the Fazārah tribe of the Najd that came to the Prophet shortly after his campaign to Tabūk. Cf. Ibn Sa\textacute{d}, \textit{I}, 42; Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Usd}, II, 71–73; and Nuwayri, 61ff. [\textquoteleft Kharijah b. Hu\textsuperscript{ṣ}ayn\textquoteright]. On Fazārah, a tribe of the Ghanañ group, see \textit{EP}, s.v. \textquoteleft Fazāra\textquoteright (W. M. Watt); cf. note 233, below.

\textsuperscript{225} Cf. Nuwayri, 61, and p. 38, above; Caetani, 592.

\textsuperscript{226} The Prophet\textquotesingle s freedman and an early convert; originally of the Kalb tribe of Syria, he was sent as leader of a raid on southern Syria toward the end of the Prophet\textquotesingle s life. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Usd}, II, 224–27.

\textsuperscript{228} It lies about twenty miles east of Medina on the way to al-Rabadhah, according to al-Mas\textacute{u}dī, \textit{Tanbhīh} (BGA VIII), 252. [Al-Rabadhah is 175 km east of Medina; see note 271 below.] Yāqūt gives conflicting accounts of Dhū al-Qaṣṣah\textquotesingle s location. Cf. Hamdani, 143 l. 21, who lists a \textquoteleft Dhū al-Qi\textsuperscript{d}dah\textquoteright in the vicinity of al-Sharabah and Zarūd on the road to Iraq.

\textsuperscript{229} Chieftain of the clan al-Dil of Kinānah, who, after long resisting the Prophet, joined him late: Caskel, II, 447, and Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Usd}, V, 47. On the Khārijah b. Ḥiṣn had lit upon him at al-Sharabbah,²³⁰ taking what he had,²³¹ and subsequently returned it to the Banū Fazarah. So Nawfal returned to Abū Bakr in Medina, in advance of Usāmah’s arrival before Abū Bakr.

The first war in the riddah after the death of the Prophet was the war of al-ʿAnsī. The war of al-ʿAnsī was in the Yemen. [Next] was the war of Khārijah b. Ḥiṣn, and [that of] Manzūr b. Zabbān b. Sayyār²³² at the head of Ghaṭafān²³³ while the Muslims were unaware. So Abū Bakr repaired to a forest and hid himself in it, then God routed the unbelievers.

According to ʿUbaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sāri—Shuʿayb—Sayf—al-Mujālid b. Saʿīd: After Usāmah had gone away, the land sank into disbelief, and from every tribe either a small group or the whole showed disobedience²³⁴ and apostatized, except for Quraysh and Thaqīf.²³⁵

According to ʿUbaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sāri—Shuʿayb—Sayf—Hishām b. ʿUrwah—his father:²³⁶ After the Apostle of God had died and Usāmah had departed, the Arabs apostatized, in large or small groups;²³⁷ and Musaylimah and ʿUbaydallāh²³⁸ feigned [divine] inspiration, so that the situation

---

²³⁰ A place between al-Rabadhah and al-Salīlah in the Ghaṭafān country (Yaqūt, s.v.).
²³¹ Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147, observes that this means the tribute in livestock that Nawfal had gathered.
²³² Another chief of Fazarah; he embraced Islam and had marriage ties to close associates of the Prophet before his rebellion. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 420; Caskel, II, 398.
²³³ Ghaṭafān was a group of tribes east of Medina, including ʿAbdallāh b. Ghaṭafān, ʿAbs, Ashja’, and Dhubyān; Dhubyān included the tribes of Fazarah, Murrah, and Thaʿlabah. Cf. Caskel, II, 274; EP, s.v. “Ghaṭafān” [J. W. Fück].
²³⁵ The main tribe of al-Ṭāʾīf. Cf. Caetani, 583.
²³⁷ ʿAwāmma aw khawāssa. Similarly, in other passages on p. 42 ʿāmma and khāssa are rendered as “the bulk of” and “a few of,” or “large and small groups of.” Caetani, 583, understands ʿawāmma as “all of [Ṭayyi’ and Asad].”
²³⁸ According to Muslim tradition, the “false prophets” in al-Yamāmah and the Najd respectively.
regarding the two of them became serious. The common people of Ṭayyi' and Asad\textsuperscript{239} gathered to Ṭulayḥa, and Ghatafan apostatized (except for those from Asḥa' and the leaders of groups of mixed origins), and they rendered the oath of allegiance to him. Hawāzin\textsuperscript{240} remained ambivalent;\textsuperscript{241} they withheld [payment of] the sādaqah tax,\textsuperscript{242} except for those from Ṭhāqīf and its party.\textsuperscript{243} The bulk of Jadilah\textsuperscript{244} and the weak groups were guided by them. A few of of Banū Sulaym\textsuperscript{245} apostatized, and likewise the rest of the people in every place.

The envoys\textsuperscript{246} of the Prophet arrived [in Medina] from Yemen and Yamāmah and the territory of Banū Asad, [along with] delegations of those with whom the Prophet had corresponded. His business regarding al-Aswad and Musaylimah and Ṭulayḥah had been carried out by means of reports and letters; so they presented their letters to Abū Bakr, and informed him of the news. At this Abū Bakr said to them, "You will not leave before messengers come from your commanders and from others, with [news of] more cunning and more bitter [things?] than that which you have described, and [reports of] the unraveling of affairs." It was not long before there came to them from every place the letters of the Prophet's commanders, with [news of] the rebellion\textsuperscript{247} of some [group], large or small, and of their

\begin{footnotes}
\item[239] Ṭayyi' and Asad were neighboring, largely nomadic tribes whose territory was near the "mountains of Ṭayyi'" (ʾAjā' and Salmā) in the Najd. Cf. Ef\textsuperscript{2}, s.v. "Asad, Banū" [H. Kindermann]; Caskel, II, 194, 555; Landau-Tasseron, "Asad from Jāhiliyya to Islam"; idem, "The Participation of Ṭayyi in the Ridda."

\item[240] A large confederation of tribes in northern and west-central Arabia that included ʿAmīr b. Ṣaʿṣa‘āh and Ṭhāqīf, although the latter, who were townsmen, often went their own way, as here. Cf. Ef\textsuperscript{2}, s.v. "Hawāzin" [W. M. Watt].

\item[241] Lit., "put one foot forward and held one foot back."

\item[242] Although in later jurisprudence sādaqah tax came to mean voluntary alms, and thus was little different from zakāt, at the time of the riddah it meant tribute paid by nomads to the Islamic state. See Simonson, 32–33; Donner, Conquests, 251–52, 265, and index.

\item[244] Jadilah and al-Ghawth were the two main divisions of Ṭayyi', Cf. Caskel, II, 252.

\item[246] Cf. Nuwayri, 62.

\item[247] Lit., "unraveling, coming undone of what had been done," i.e., renunciation of their agreements.
\end{footnotes}
boldly committing aggression against the Muslims. So Abū Bakr combated them with that which the Apostle of God had combated them—with envoys; hence he sent their messengers back with his orders, and sent [further] envoys after the [original] messengers. And he awaited the arrival of Usāmah [before] clashing with them. The first who clashed were 'Abs and Dhubyān; they hastened to [clash with] him, so that he fought them before the return of Usāmah.

According to 'Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sārī—Shu'ayb—Sayf—Abū 'Amr—Zayd b. Aslam: The Apostle of God died while his tax collectors were among the Quḍā'ah. Over the Kalb was Imru’ al-Qays b. al-Asbāgh al-Kalbī of the Banū Abdallāh; and over al-Qayn was 'Amr b. al-Hakam; and over the Sa‘d Hudhaym was Mu‘āwiyyah b. Fulān al-Wā’īli

According to al-Sārī al-Walibī: Wadi‘ah al-Kalbi apostatized with those of Kalb who helped him, whereas Imru’ al-Qays remained obedient, and Zumayl b. Quṭbah al-Qaynī rebelled with those of Banū al-Qayn who helped him, whereas 'Amr remained [obedient], and Mu‘āwiyyah apostatized with those of Sa‘d Hudhaym who helped him. So Abū Bakr wrote to Imru’ al-Qays b. Fulān—he was the grandfather of Sukaynah, daughter of Husayn—to march to Wadi‘ah, and [he wrote to] ‘Amr to take a stand against Zumayl and against Mu‘awiyah al-‘Udhri. So when Usamah found himself in the midst of the Qudā‘ah country, he deployed the cavalry among them and ordered them to make those who had stood firmly by Islam rise up against those who had turned back from it, so that they fled until they took refuge in Dūmah258 and gathered round Wadi‘ah. Usamah’s cavalry returned to him, whereupon he decamped with them until he raided al-Ḥamqatayn,259 striking among the Banū al-Ḍubayb of Judhām260 and among the Banū Khaylil of Lakhm261 and their party262 of the two factions.263 He drove them out of Ābil264 and returned unharmed and bearing spoil.

According to al-Sāri—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad:265 The Apostle of God died, and Asad and Ghaṭafān and Ṭayyī gathered around Ṭulayḥah, except for the principal leaders of some groups in the three tribes. Asad gathered at Sumayra’,266 and Fazārah and those who follow them267 of Ghaṭafān to the south of Tibah,268 and Ṭayyī269 on 259. A place on the fringes of the Syrian steppe (Yaḥūṭ, s.v.).

260. The tribe of Judhām lived in the northern Hijāz and Transjordan; al-Dubayb b. Qurṭ was one of their main clans. Cf. EI², s.v. “Djudham” (C. E. Bosworth); Caskel, II, 243, 263.
261. Text has “Khalil.” Lakhm was a tribe of southern Iraq and southern Syria, absorbed in Syria by Judhām, Khaylil was a branch of Ghassān associated with the tribe of Lakhm. Cf. Caskel, II, 339; Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147; Emendanda; EI², s.v. “Lakhm” (H. Lammens—Irfan Shahid).
262. Cf. note 243, above.
263. Al-qabilayn.
264. Manuscript C has ʿy.l; Kos has Ubna. See note 96, above.
265. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 344–45 (extending as far as p. 52, below); Caetani, 596–99.
266. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 344, has “Sumayrā,” probably owing to confusion with Sumayrah, another place near Mecca; cf. Yaḥūṭ, s.v.v. Samirā was in the Asad country on the pilgrimage road to Iraq northeast of Mecca.
267. Kos has “those who come to them.”
268. Yaḥūṭ identifies this as a village near Zarūd, which was on the Ḥuḍh-Mecca pilgrimage road in the Shaqiq sands. Perhaps it is identical with Ṭabah, a village on the southeast flank of Mt. Salmā in the Asad/Ṭayyī country; cf. the shift of a to i in other names, such as Jāzān/Jizān. On Ṭabah, see Thilo, s.v. and map B.
269. Kos has Zaby.
the borders of their territory. Tha'labah b. Sa'd and those who followed them of Murrah and 'Abs gathered at al-Abraq of al-Rabadhah, and people from the Banū Kinānāh crowded around them to the point that the country could not sustain them; so they divided into two groups, one group remaining in al-Abraq while the other went to Dhu al-Qaṣṣah. Tulayḥah reinforced them with [his brother] Ḥībāl. Ḥībāl was in charge of the people of Dhu al-Qaṣṣah from Banū Asad and those of Layth and al-Dil and Mudlij who crowded around; and over Murrah in al-Abraq was 'Awf b. Fulān b. Sīnān; and over Tha'labah and 'Abs was al-Ḥarīth b. Fulān, one of the Banū Subay'. They had sent delegations that came to Medina and stayed with the chiefs of the people; so [the Medinan chiefs], except for 'Abbās, put them up and interceded for them before Abū Bakr, on condition that [the petitioning tribes] should perform prayer but not pay the alms tax. But God strengthened Abū Bakr's resolution in the truth, and he said: 'If they refuse me [even] a hobble, I shall fight them for it.' Now, the hobbles of the šadaqah camels were required with the [camels paid as] šadaqah from the people who paid šadaqah; so he refused [their request], whereupon the delegation of those apostates who were near Medina returned to their tribes, telling them how few the people of Medina were and making them covetous of it. After Abū Bakr had expelled the delegation, he placed some people on the mountain passes279 of Medina—'Ali al-Zubayr,280 Talhah,281 and 'Abdallah b. Mas'ūd282—and enjoined283 the people of Medina to go to the mosque. And he said to them: "The land has sunk into disbelief, and their delegation has seen that you are few and that you would be unaware whether you were approached by day or by night. The nearest of them is [only] a stage284 from you. The people were hoping that we would accept them and be reconciled with them, but we refused them285 and dissolved their treaty. So get ready." Consequently they made preparations, and it wasn't three [days] before they came raiding Medina by night, leaving some286 of their [number] behind in Dhu Ḥusā287 to serve as reserves for them. The mounted raiders288 reached the mountain passes by night, while the fighting men were in them; there were people on foot in front of them, so they alerted them and sent news to Abū Bakr. Abū Bakr sent back to them that they should hold their positions; so they did so, while [Abū Bakr] came out to them leading the people of the mosque [mounted] on their water-hauling camels. At this the enemy lost their will;289 so the Muslims pursued them on their camels until they reached Dhu Ḥusā,290 whereupon the reserves came out against them

---

283. IK and Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil: "required."
284. Barīd, the distance between courier stops, six to twelve miles; cf. Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, s.v.
285. Kos and Manuscript C: "We came to them."
286. IK: "half."
287. A valley near al-Sharabbah in the territory of 'Abs and the rest of Ghatafan; cf. Yaqūt, s.v.; Thilo, s.v. and map C, places it circa 160 km east of Medina, just west of al-Rabadhah. Nuwayri, 63, has Ḥusā."
288. Reading al-ghahrah, "horsemen making a raid," for the text's ghiwarz, "raiding" [rare], as proposed by Glossary.
289. IK: "turned back."
290. Manuscript C: Dhu Khushub.
with churning skins that they had inflated and on which they had placed ropes. Then they rolled them with their feet in the faces of the camels, so that each skin rolled in its tether. At this the Muslims' camels took fright while they were [mounted] on them—they do not shy at anything the way they did from those skins—and steered [the Muslims] out of their control until they brought them into Medina; but no Muslim was thrown or wounded, so al-Khuṭayl b. Aws, brother of al-Ḥuṭay’ah b. Aws, said about that:292

My saddle and she-camel are a ransom for Banū Dhubyân, on the evening when Abū Bakr is stabbed with lances. But [something] was rolled by the feet so that they feared it, to a certain degree, no more and no less.294 [Even] God has troops who are given a taste of it; verily they are reckoned in that which is counted among the wonders of the age.

{Al-Zuhri recited [the end of the last line] as: “among the memorable deeds of the age.” According to 'Abdallāh al-Laythī: Banū ‘Abd Manāt were among the apostates—they and Banū Dhubyân were involved in that affair at Dhū al-Qaṣṣah and Dhū Ḥusān.)297

We obeyed the Apostle of God as long as he was among us,298 So, oh worshipers of God, what [is so great about] Abū Bakr?

---

291. A famous poet who claimed to be from the 'Abs tribe; cf. EI², s.v. "al-Ḥuṭay’ah" (I. Goldziher—C. Pellat; Ibn al-Athir, Usd, II, 30.
292. Poem text has numerous variant readings not noted here.
293. Reading yuḥḍā with the Cairo edition, against yuḥḍā and other variants in the text.
294. Reading in yazidu wa lā yahri with the Cairo edition, against in ṭuqīmu wa lā tasri in the text.
295. Literally, “who are made to taste His tasting,” perhaps an allusion to Qur’ān 3:185; “every soul tastes death.”
296. Reading hum wa as proposed by Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 147, and Emendanda, rather than wa hum, “and they were,” as found in text, for Abd Manāt was part of Kinānah, not of Dhubyān.
297. The verses following this parenthetical aside are a continuation of those before it, sharing the same meter (ṭawīl) and rhyme letter (r).
298. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 8: “lived.”
299. IK: “in our midst.”
The Conquest of Arabia

Will he bequeath [leadership of] us to a young camel (bakr) after him, if he should die?

That would be, in God's name, a disaster. Why won't you return our delegation in time?

Have you no fear of the blast of braying young camels? Indeed, the thing they requested of you, and that you denied, is like dates, or sweeter to me than dates.

So the enemy (qawm) thought [the Muslims] weak and sent news to the people of Dhū al-Qassāh, whereupon they advanced against them, relying on those who had brought them the news, they being [still] unaware of God's work, which He wished and desired to be communicated among them. At this Abū Bakr passed the night getting ready by putting the army in order; then he went out in battle order in the last part of that night, marching with al-Nu'mān b. Muqarrin on his right flank, and 'Abdallāh b. Muqarrin on his left flank, and Suwayd b. Muqarrin with the riders at the rear. No sooner had the dawn broken than they found themselves and the enemy on the same plain. They heard neither a footfall nor a voice from the Muslims until [the Muslims] fell on them with the sword, slaying [them] at the end of that night so that, before the upper limb of the sun arose, they had turned their backs to [the Muslims]. [The Muslims] plundered them of all their riding camels, and Hibāl was killed. Abū Bakr pursued them until he camped

300. Cairo ed: "Will he bequeath it...?" The verse is clearly a satiric comment on Abū Bakr's name, which means "father of the young camel."
301. Ibn Hubaysh: "by God's house."
302. Lit., "the one who breaks the back," qāsimatu al-zāhri.
303. Reading ṭāghiyat al-bakri with Cairo, against ṭā'iyat al-bakri, "herders of young camels," in the text.
304. I.e., it would have been better had you complied with the delegation's requests.
305. Al-nās, lit., "the people." For a very different account of this episode, see Diyārbakrī, II, 204.
306. He and his brothers 'Abdallāh and Suwayd were warriors of the tribe of Muzaynah who had led large groups of their tribe to the Prophet. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Usd, V, 30–31.
307. Chalabū-hum 'alā 'āmmati zahrī-him....
308. Kos and Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 345, have "men." Cf. Ibn al-Athir, II, 347; and pp. 62–63, below. Diyārbakrī, II, 206 bottom, says that he was captured and asked to be executed.
at Dhū al-Qaṣṣah; it was the first conquest. He put in (Dhū al-Qaṣṣah) al-Nuʿmān b. Muqarrin at the head of a number [of troops] and returned to Medina. The polytheists were humiliated by (this victory), so the Banū Dhubyān and ‘Abs fell upon those Muslims who were among them and slaughtered them; and those who backed them did as they did. Meanwhile, the [other] Muslims grew stronger through Abū Bakr’s battle. Abū Bakr swore that he would certainly make slaughter among the polytheists [in vengeance for] every killing [of a Muslim], and would kill in every tribe [someone] for each of the Muslims whom they had killed, and more. Ziyād b. Ḥanżalah al-Tamīmī said about that:

By early morn Abū Bakr hastened to them just as most of them strove toward their death. He rejoiced supremely at their braying while Ḥibā drooled out his life to them.

He also said:

We set up for them on the left side; then they gathered together in a jumble, like the troop of warriors who make their camels kneel on well-watered pastures. They had no endurance for war, when it arose on the morning when Abū Bakr rose up with [his] men. We approached the Banū ‘Abs by night, at their nearer Nibā’, and Dhubyān we scared away with back-breaking losses.

Then they continued that [policy] until the Muslims in every tribe were more firm in their religion for it, and [until] the

---

310. According to Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, II, 213, he had been sent by the Prophet to help the Tamīmī chieftain Qays b. Āṣim resist the “false prophet” Musayyilimah.

311. IK has “mountains.”

312. Fa-kubkibo; cf. kābkaba, “troop,” in the next line, presumably an allusion to Qur’ān 26:94.

313. The nearer of the “two Nibajes” [al-Nibā‘] was near Mt. Salmā, about 400 km northeast of Medina; cf. Ibn Manẓūr, II, 372; Yāqūt, s.v. “Nībā‘”; Thīlo, 76 and Map B.

314. I.e., of severe retaliations; lit., “they did nothing but that.”
fortunes (amr) of the polytheists were reversed in every tribe. The šadaqah tax\textsuperscript{316} of [various] people came to Medina by night, [brought by] Ṣafwān and then al-Zibriqān and then ‘Adi\textsuperscript{317}—Ṣafwān [arriving] at the beginning of the night, and the second [installment] in the middle of it, and the third at the end of it. The one who announced the good news of [the arrival of] Ṣafwān was Sa‘d b. Abi Waqqāṣ\textsuperscript{318} and the one who announced al-Zibriqān was ‘Abd al-Raḥmān b. ‘Awf\textsuperscript{319} and the one who announced ‘Adi was ‘Abdallāh b. Maṣ‘ūd—or, according to other [traditionists], Abū Qatādah.\textsuperscript{320} As each one of them appeared, the people said, “[He is] bringing a warning [about the enemy]!”\textsuperscript{321} But Abū Bakr said, “This is a bearer of good tidings, this is a protector, not [someone] worn out [from urgency].” Then, after he had divulged the good news, they said, “Long live\textsuperscript{322} the good news you announce!”

That was sixty days after Usāmah’s departure; a few days after that, Usāmah\textsuperscript{323} came [back to Medina], two months and some days [after his departure]. Thereupon Abū Bakr left him in charge of Medina, saying to him and his army, “Rest, and rest your riding camels.” Then he went out, leading those who had gone out to Dhū al-Qaṣṣah and those who had been in the passes \textsuperscript{316}. Cf. Dīyarbakri, II, 203–4.

\textsuperscript{318}. Important early convert from the Zuhrah clan of Quraysh, sometimes said to have been the third male to embrace Islam. Cf. Ibn Sa‘d, III/1, 97–105; Watt, \textit{Mecca}, 89–90.

\textsuperscript{321}. Text simply has nadhir, “a warner,” but the term is used in the military context in the sense of one bringing news of the enemy.

\textsuperscript{322}. Lit., “may it be long.”

\textsuperscript{323}. Cf. Nuwayri, 63.
on that side [of the city]. But the Muslims said to him, "Oh Caliph of the Apostle of God, we beg you by God not to expose yourself [to battle], for if you were to be struck down there would be no order among the people. It would be harder on the enemy if you were to remain [here]. So send a man [in your place]; then if he is struck down you can put another in command." But [Abū Bakr] said, "No, by God, I won't do it; indeed, I will set an example for you myself." Then he marched out in battle order to Dhu Ḥusā and Dhu al-Qaṣṣah, with 'Abdallāh and Suwayd in their accustomed positions,324 until they descended upon the people of al-Rabadhah at al-Abraq. They fought, God destroying al-Ḥārith and 'Awf;325 al-Ḥuṣay'ah326 was taken prisoner, and 'Abs and Banū Bakr327 fled. Abū Bakr remained a few days at al-Abraq. Banū Dhubyān had dominated the country, but he said, "It is [henceforth] forbidden for Banū Dhubyān to control this country, since God has given it to us as spoil," and removed it [from their control].328 Now, when the apostates had been overcome, and entered [once again] the gate [by] which they had [formerly] gone out, and [Abū Bakr] had treated the people leniently,329 the Banū Thaʿlabah came to encamp in [this country]—it had been their camping grounds—but were kept from it; so they came to Medina, saying, "Why have we been kept from camping in our country?" Whereupon [Abū Bakr] said, "You lie; it is no land of yours, but a gift restored to me [after having been stolen]," and granted them no favor. He reserved al-Abraq for the horses of the Muslims and made the rest of the country of al-Rabadhah a pasture for the people, the Banū Thaʿlabah notwithstanding. Then he reserved all of it for the [camels paid as] šadaqah tax [to] the Muslims,

324. Lit., "over what they had been over"; 'Abdallāh and Suwayd b. Muqarrin, described on p. 48, above, as commanding the left flank and rear, respectively. The third brother, al-Nuʿmān, had been left at Dhu al-Qaṣṣah.

325. On al-Ḥārith and 'Awf, see p. 45, above.

327. Probably Bakr b. 'Abdmanāt b. Kinānah, a main segment of this tribe that included many important clans. Cf. Caskel, I, Tables 36ff. and II, 222.

328. Ailā-hā; i.e., Abū Bakr deported the Banū Dhubyān from this territory.

329. The text of this phrase is at best elliptical, perhaps corrupt. Kos has "and damage had become widespread." Here and several lines below "the people" [al-nās] refers to the former rebels.
because of a fight that occurred between the people and the collectors of the sadaqah taxes.\textsuperscript{330} So he barred on that account one from the other. After 'Abs and Dhubyān were broken up, they took refuge with Tulayhah. Tulayhah had encamped at Buzākhah, having traveled to it from Samira', and stayed there.

About the battle of al-Abraq, Ziyād b. Ḥanẓalah said:

How many a battle have we witnessed at al-Abraq [victorious] against Dhubyān ablaze in fury?

We brought them an onerous disaster with the Veracious One\textsuperscript{332} when he stopped remonstrating.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—'Abdallāh b. Sa‘īd b. Thābit b. al-Jīdī and Ḥarām b. 'Uthmān—'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Ka‘b b. Mālik: When Usāmah b. Zayd arrived, Abū Bakr went out, leaving him in charge of Medina. He proceeded until he came to al-Rabaddah, [and] met Banū 'Abs and Dhubyān and a group of Banū 'Abd Manāt b. Kinānah. Then he met them at al-Abraq, whereupon he fought them so that God put them to flight and routed them. Then he returned to Medina. Now, when the army of Usāmah collected and those around Medina returned to obedience,\textsuperscript{333} (Abū Bakr) went out to Dhū al-Qaṣṣah and encamped with them, one stage from Medina in the direction of Najd. Then he divided the army there and tied the banners,\textsuperscript{334} he tied eleven banners over eleven armies and ordered the commander of each army to convoy those armed Muslims who had passed by him, leaving some of the armed men to defend their country.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūṣuf—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad:\textsuperscript{335} When Usāmah and his army had \textsuperscript{330} Or perhaps "recipients of the sadaqah taxes": *ashāb al-sadaqāt.

\textsuperscript{331} A well in the Najd, in Asad or Tayyi' country. Cf. EI², s.v. "Buzākha" (C. E. Bosworth).

\textsuperscript{332} Al-Ṣiddiq, the epithet of Abū Bakr.

\textsuperscript{333} Or "collected, gathered in numbers," ṭābā.

\textsuperscript{334} The phrase "to tie a banner [for someone]," used here and in the following sentences, is an idiom also meaning "to appoint [someone] the commander of an army."

rested their riding camels and had assembled, and more sadaqah taxes than they needed had come in, Abū Bakr deployed the expeditionary forces and tied the banners,\(^336\) eleven banners [in all]. He tied a banner for Khalid b. al-Walid,\(^337\) ordering him [to fight] Tulayyah b. Khuwaylid, and then when he finished to march against Mālik b. Nuwayrah\(^338\) at al-Butāh,\(^339\) if he resisted him. [He also tied a banner] for `Ikrimah b. Abī Jahl,\(^340\) ordering him [to fight] Musaylimah, and for al-Muhājir b. Abī Umayyah, ordering him [to fight] the armies of [al-Aswād] al-`Anṣī and to help the Abnā' against Qays b. Makshūh and those people of Yemen who supported him against them. Then [al-Muhājir] was supposed to pass on to Kindah in Ḥaḍramawt. [He tied a banner] for Khalid b. Sa`īd b. al-`Aṣ, who had come at that time from the Yemen and left his governorship, and sent him to al-Ḥamqatayn in the Syrian heights; and for `Amr b. al-`Āṣ\(^341\) [to go] to the combined [tribes of] Qudā'ah and [to] Wadi`ah [al-Kalbi]\(^342\) and al-Ḥārith [al-Subay`i].\(^343\) And [he tied a banner also] for Ḥudhayfah b. Miḥṣan al-Ghalfānī\(^344\) and [1881]

---

336. I.e., appointed the commanders of various forces.
337. Prominent military commander of the Makhzūm clan of Quraysh and a relatively late convert. Cf. *EF*², s.v. “Khalid b. al-Walid” [P. Crone].
338. Chief of the Yarbū’ branch of Tamīm, appointed by the Prophet as tax collector over part of Tamim but said in some [but not all] accounts to have withheld tax after the Prophet’s death. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 295–96; Shoufānī 82–83; *EF*², s.v. “Mālik b. Nuwayra’” [E. Landau-Tasseron].
340. Fierce opponent of the Prophet from Makhzūm of Quraysh; he fled after conquest of Mecca by the Prophet to avoid execution; later he was pardoned by the Prophet and given important posts. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 4–7.
344. According to Ṭabarī, he was of Ḥimyar; he later served as ‘Umar’s governor of ‘Umān and al-Yamāma and participated in the conquest of Iraq [p. 152, below; Ṭabarī II, 2207, 2212]. However, Ibn al-Kalbī considers him the same as ‘Uyaynah b. Ḥisn al-Fazārī [see note 403, below]; cf. Caskel, II, 328 (“Ḥudhayfah b. Ḥisn”) and 580 (“Uyaynah b. Ḥisn”). Ṭabarī considers them two separate individuals, but the possibility of some confusion should be noted. Ḥudhayfah’s nisbah “al-Ghalfānī” is otherwise unknown, and is sometimes given in another form (e.g., “al-Qal‘ānī”; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, I, 390); moreover, the ordered him to Daba;345 and for 'Arfajah b. Harthamah346 and ordered him to Mahrah,347 and commanded the two of them to join, each one of them having in his own province priority over his companion. He sent Shurahbil b. Hasanah348 on the heels of 'Ikrimah b. Abi Jahl, saying that when he was finished with al-Yamāmah349 he should betake himself to Quḍā‘ah and fight the apostates with his cavalry. And [he tied a banner] for Ṭurayfah b. Ḥājiz350 and commanded him to [attack] Banū Sulaym and those who backed them of Hawāzin; and [he tied a banner] for Suwayd b. Muqarrin and ordered him to the coastal district of Yemen, and for al-‘Alā’ b. al-Ḥaḍrami351 and ordered him to Bahrayn. So the commanders set out from Dhū al-Qaṣṣah and encamped on their course [of march], whereupon each commander's army overtook him, he having charged them with his instructions.352 (Abū Bakr) [also] wrote to all the apostates to whom [a force] had been sent.

word al-Ghalfānī/al-Qal‘ānī could have resulted from misreading the word al-Ghatafānī—an appropriate nisbāh for someone [like 'Uyaynah] from Fazarah, as Fazarah was a section of Ghatafan. 345. Market town and former capital of 'Umān. Cf. Yaqūt, s.v.; Muqaddasi [BGA 3], 53. 346. A chief of the Bāriq clan of Khuzā‘ah. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Usd, III, 401; Caskel, II, 192. 347. A tribe of southern Arabia between Ḥaḍramawt and 'Umān. Cf. Yaqūt, s.v.; Caskel, II, 382. 348. An ally of the Zuhrah or Jumāh clan of Quraysh, of uncertain tribal origin; he was an early convert to Islam. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Usd, II, 391. 349. An oasis district in central eastern Arabia, about 750 km east of Medina, just west of the Dahna’ sands; its main oases were Ḥajir [not to be confused with Hajar] and Jaww. Cf. TAVO B, VII, 1, and Thilo, s.v., and Map D, warning against misunderstandings in Yaqūt and other medieval geographers. 350. Ibn al-Athir, Kamīl, II, 346, has “Ma’n b. Ḥajiz.” Ṭurayfah is said to have been a companion of the Prophet by Ibn al-Athir, Usd, II, 51–52 [“Ṭurayfah b. Ḥajir”], but little information on him survives. Nuwayri, 65, has “Ma’n b. Ḥajiz—but some say Ṭurayfah b. Ḥajiz...” 351. Al-‘Alā’, of the South Arabian tribe of al-Ṣadif, had been the Prophet's governor over Bahrayn; cf. Ibn al-Athir, Usd, IV, 7–8. 352. The text leaves ambiguous whether this phrase refers to the commanders instructing the troops or to Abū Bakr's instructing the commanders.
Abū Bakr's Letter to the Apostates

[Abū Bakr's Letter to the Apostates]353

According to al-Sarī—Sayf—'Abdallāh b. Sa'īd—'Abd al-Rahmān b. Ka'b b. Mālik: Qaḥdham354 participated with him in commissioning [the armies] and in writing [the letter to the apostates], so that the letters to the apostate tribes of the Arabs were identical:

In the name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful.

From Abū Bakr, caliph of the Apostle of God, to whomsoever this letter of mine may reach among the commoners and notables who has stood fast in his Islam or who has turned back from it: Peace upon those who follow the [true] guidance and who have not turned back to error and blindness after [having received] the [true] guidance. Verily I praise to you God, other than Whom there is no god. I bear witness that there is no god but God alone, Who has no associate, and that Muḥammad is His Servant and His Apostle; we affirm that which he brought, and that which he denied we declare to be unbelief and strive against it. Now then: Verily God, may He be exalted, sent Muhammad with His truth to His creation as a bearer of good tidings and as a warner355 and as one calling [others] to God, with His permission, and as a light-bringing lamp356 so that he might warn [all] who live, and so that the saying against the unbelievers might be fulfilled.357 So God guided with the truth358 whoever responded to Him, and the Apostle of God, with His permission, struck whoever turned his back to Him until he came to Islām, willingly or grudgingly. Then God took His Apostle to Him, he having carried out God’s com-

353. This material is omitted by Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil; cf. Balansi, 27–29; Nuwayri, 65–69.
354. He is identified in the index to the Cairo edition as the scribe of Yūsuf b. 'Umar, but, as the latter was a governor of the late Umayyad period, he cannot be meant here; cf. Ṭabarī, I, 2388, and II, 1739.
356. Qurān 33:46.
357. Qurān 36:70.
358. Nuwayri, 66: “to the truth.”
mand, and counseled His community, and carried out [the duty] that was upon him; for God had made that clear to him and to the people of Islam in the book that was sent down. Thus He said,359 "You are dead, and they are dead"; and he said,360 "We have not made any man before you immortal; so, if you die, should they then be immortal?" And to the believers He said,361 "Muḥammad is only an apostle. The apostles before him have passed away; so, if he dies or is killed, will you turn on your heels? For he who may turn on his heels will not harm God one whit, but God will reward the grateful." So whoever worshiped Muḥammad, indeed Muhammad has died; but whoever worshiped God alone, Who has no associate, indeed God is always with you,362 Living, Eternal. He does not die,363 nor do slumber or sleep take Him; He guards His cause, takes vengeance on His enemy, and punishes him.

I recommend to you the fear of God and your right share and portion of God364 and of that which your Prophet brought you; and that you let yourselves be guided by His guidance, and cleave to the religion365 of God. For indeed, whomever God has not guided is astray,366 and whomever He has not made safe is afflicted, and whomever God has not helped is forsaken. Whomever God guides is on the right way, and whomever He allows to go astray is lost. God said,367 "Whomever God guides is on the right way, but whomever He lets get lost, you will find no friend to guide him";

---

360. Qur'ān 21:34.
361. Qur'ān 3:144.
362. Lit., "God lies in wait for you," meaning that He is everywhere and cannot be evaded—a reference to Qur'ān 89:14.
366. Balansi, 28: "lost," with greater divergence through the remainder of the paragraph.
Abū Bakr's Letter to the Apostates

nor will any work of his in the world be accepted until he acknowledges Him; and neither repentance nor ransom will be accepted from him in the afterlife.

I have learned that some of you have turned back from your religion after you had acknowledged Islam and labored in it, out of negligence of God and ignorance of His command, and in compliance with the devil. God said, 'When We said to the angels, 'Bow down before Adam,' they bowed down except for Iblis. He was one of the jinn; so he strayed from the command of his Lord. Do you then wish to take him and his offspring as friends to the exclusion of Me, even though they are your enemy? How bad an exchange [that is] for the transgressors!' And He said, 'The devil is an enemy to you, so take him for an enemy. He only calls his party that they may be among the people of the flame.' I have sent to you someone at the head of an army of the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār and those who follow [them] in good works. I ordered him not to fight anyone or to kill anyone until he has called him to the cause of God; so that those who respond to him and acknowledge [Him] and renounce [unbelief] and do good works, [my envoy] shall accept him and help him to [do right], but I have ordered him to fight those who deny [Him] for that reason. So he will not spare any one of them he can gain mastery over, [but may] burn them with fire, slaughter them by any means, and take women and children captive; nor shall he accept from anyone anything except Islam. So whoever follows him, it is better for him; but whoever leaves him, will not weaken God. I have 368. Sarf wa`adl. For different possible meanings of this phrase, see Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, 1682, col. 1 top.

372. The text in Balansi, 28–29, differs considerably for the remainder of this sentence, although the general import is the same.
373. Or perhaps "God will not be incapable [of dealing with him]."
ordered my messenger to read my letter to you in all gathering places. The invitation [to God's cause] shall be the call to prayer. If, when the Muslims make the call to prayer, they do likewise [in response], leave them alone; but, if they do not make the call to prayer [with the Muslims], then grant them no respite. And, if they do make the call to prayer [with the Muslims], ask them what has come over them; then, if they deny [God], grant them no respite, but, if they acknowledge [God], He will accept them and bring them to what they should do.

So the messengers put the letters through before the armies, and the commanders went out, taking with them the treaties.

In the name of God, the Compassionate, the Merciful. This is a treaty from Abū Bakr, caliph of the Apostle of God, to so-and-so, sent [by Abū Bakr] when he dispatched [people] to fight whoever had repudiated Islam. He requires him to fear God to the utmost of his ability in all his affairs, whether they be secret or public; and he orders him to take God’s command seriously, and to strive against those who turn away from Him and turn back from Islam to the desires of the devil, after he has explained to them [why they are to be attacked] and called them to the cause of Islam. Then, if they respond, he should restrain himself from them; but if they do not respond, he should launch his attack against them until they acknowledge Him. Then he

374. Or perhaps “...to read my letter in all gathering places of yours.” Here it is not clear whether the text refers to the gathering places of the tribes being contacted or to those of the messengers, in the latter instance the party addressed would have shifted from the tribes to the messengers. This shift has already been completed in the next sentence. The parallel version in Balansi, 29, ends with this sentence.

375. Cf. Nuwayrī, 68–69; Ibn Hubaysh, 16 l. 18ff., a loose parallel written from Abū Bakr to Khālid b. al-Walid.

376. Ibn Hubaysh: “to error and jāhiliyya and the desires (amānī) of the devil....” The editor of Nuwayrī suggests “his refuge” or “place of refuge.” The rest of the sentence is missing in Ibn Hubaysh and in Nuwayrī.

377. Ba’da an yughdira ilayhim, lit., “after he has apologized to them.”
should inform them of [the duties] that are incumbent upon them and [the advantages] that accrue to them, and should take what is [imposed] on them and give them what they are due. He should not give [those that do not respond] a respite; nor should the Muslims turn back from fighting their enemy. Whoever does respond to God’s command and acknowledges Him, he will accept that from him and help him [to accomplish] it in kindness. He should only fight whoever denies God [so as to make him] acknowledge that which has come from God. So if [someone] has responded to the call, [the Muslim] has no cause to get at him; God shall be his reckoner thereafter in whatever he seeks to conceal.\textsuperscript{378} Whoever does not respond to the cause of God shall be killed and fought wherever he may be and wherever he may have come to, as an enemy.\textsuperscript{379} [God] shall not accept from [such a] one anything that he may give, except Islam; but whoever responds to Him and acknowledges [Him], He shall accept [it] from him and instruct him. [The Muslim] should fight whoever denies [God]; so, if God lets him prevail over [the unbeliever], he should make slaughter among them by any means, with weapons and fire; then he should divide that which God bestowed as spoil upon him, except for the fifth part, which he should convey to us. And [he should take care] to prevent his companions from rash acts\textsuperscript{380} and evil [deeds], and not to introduce into them auxiliary troops\textsuperscript{381} until he can get to know them and learn what\textsuperscript{382} they are, [making sure that] they should not be \textsuperscript{378} Ibn Hubaysh, 16: “in his actions.”

\textsuperscript{379} Nuwayri and Cairo read haythu balagha murāghima-hu for the text’s haythu balagha murāghamatan. Cf. Ibn Hubaysh, 16, last line: “wherever he learned of their call [to Islam],” haythu balagha bi-du‘ā‘i-him.
\textsuperscript{380} Lit., “haste,” “precipitancy” [al-‘ajalah].
\textsuperscript{381} Text has hashw; Ibn Hubaysh, 17, has “a kind of people” [iins min al-nās]. But cf. Ibn Hubaysh, 43, 4 lines from end, where in another context he speaks of hashw kathir min al-‘arab, “many Arab [i.e., nomad?] auxiliaries.”
\textsuperscript{382} Ibn Hubaysh, 17: “who.”
spies, and that the Muslims may not be undermined because of them. And [he should] treat the Muslims justly and deal gently with them in marching and encamping, and should seek them out. And none of [the Muslims] should try to outdo another [in reaching a place]. [The commander] should follow [my] counsel regarding good companionship and gentle speech, as far as the Muslims are concerned.

The Remainder of the Account about Ghaṭafān at the Time of Their Joining with Ṭulayḥah and Other Things Relating to the Affair of Ṭulayḥah

According to 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa‘d—his uncle—Sayf; and according to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad and Badr b. al-Khalil and Hishām b. 'Urwah: After 'Abs and Dhubyān and those attached to them took refuge at al-Buzākhah, Tulayḥah sent to Jadilah and al-Ghawth [proposing that they] unite with him, so people from the two clans hurried to him, having ordered their tribe to join them, and came before Ṭulayḥah. Meanwhile Abū Bakr sent 'Adī [b. Ḥātim of Ṭayyī'] to his tribe, before sending Khālid out from Dhū al-Qaṣṣah, saying, “Overtake them [so that] they will not be destroyed.” So he went out to them and cajoled them. Khalid went out on ['Adī's] heels, and Abū Bakr ordered him to begin with Ṭayyī on the flanks [of the mountains], then to head for al-Buzākhah, and then in third place for al-Butāh, and not to leave [a place] when he finished with a group until he had spoken to (Abū Bakr) and he had ordered him to do so. Abū Bakr let it be known

383. 'Uyun. Manuscript C has “aid” ['awn], Kos has “a wealthy person” [ghani].
384. Balansi, 3r; Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 346–47; Nuwayrī, 70; Diyārbakrī, II, 205–6 (to p. 62, below); Caetani, 608.
385. Lit., “he twirled [the hair] of the upper parts of the camel’s back” (fatala-hum fi al-dhirwah wa al-ghārib); on the idiom, see Ibn Manzūr, XIV, 284, left col., s.v. al-dhirwah.
386. ‘Alā al-‘aknāf, that is, on the sides of the “mountains of Ṭayyī” [see note 388, below]. Al-Āknāf may be a place name, but more probably it was simply a descriptive term; cf. Yāqūt, s.v.
that he was going out to Khaybar and from it would be going down to gather with him so that he would meet him on the flanks of Salma.\footnote{388} So\footnote{389} Khalid went out, skirting al-Buzâkhah, and inclined toward Aja', letting it be known that he would be going out to Khaybar\footnote{390} and then gathering with them. That made the Ṭayyi' hold back and be slow \[in joining\] Tulayhah; meanwhile, 'Adî reached them and invited them \[to Islam\]. At this they said, "We will never render the oath of allegiance to Abû al-Faṣîl." So he said: "There has come to you a group who would violate your womenfolk. Indeed, you will \[have to\] nickname him 'the Greatest Stud.'\footnote{391} So it is your business." At this they said to him, "Then meet the army \[of Khalid\] and protect us from it so that we can extricate those of us who went to al-Buzâkhah \[to join Tulayhah\]; for, if we break with Tulayhah while they are in his hands, he will kill them or take them hostage."

So\footnote{392} 'Adî met Khalid while he was in al-Sunh,\footnote{393} saying "Oh Khalid, hold back from me\footnote{394} for three days; there should gather to you five hundred warriors with whom you may strike your enemy. That is better than that you should hasten them to the Fire and be distracted by them." So \[Khalid\] did that, whereupon 'Adî returned to \[the tribe of Ṭayyi'\]. They had sent their tribes\footnote{388. Bi-al-'aknâf, 'aknâf Salmâ. Salmâ and Aja' \[next line\] were the "two mountains of Ṭayyi'\" \[modern Jabal Shammar\] in the Najd, about 400 km and maps A and B. Cf. Balansi, zi.}

\footnote{389. Cf. Nuwayrî, 71 \[\textit{-Ibn al-Kalbî\}].}

\footnote{390. An important oasis town in the northern Hiżâz. Cf. \textit{Ef}², s.v. "Khaybar"
\[L. Veccia Vaglieri\].}

\footnote{391. The account turns around a play on words. Abû Bakr literally means "father of the lively young he-camel"; a \textit{bakra} is young and strong, perhaps several years old, and the word is commonly used as a name. The Ṭayyi' refer to him pejoratively as "Abû al-Faṣîl"; Faṣîl, never used as a name, means "newly weaned camel," presumably implying inexperience, weakness, and helplessness.
The \textit{fahl} or stallion \[here translated "stud"] is a byword for strength and vigor;
hence the use of the word to designate the most highly esteemed poets as "\textit{fuhûl} al-shu'ârâ'," etc. Cf. p. 53.}

\footnote{392. \textit{Ibn Hubaysb}, 18, citing Wâqûdî, has an interesting variant version of this section. Cf. Nuwayrî, 71.}

\footnote{393. Yaqût knows this as a place in the Najd, but his localization is clearly derived from this account. Cf. Wellhausen, \textit{Skizzen}, VI, 148; \textit{Emendanda}.}

\footnote{394. I.e., from his tribe, Ṭayyi'. Kos has "from us."} men to (those of them who had joined Tulayhah), so that they reached them as reinforcements from Buzakhah. But for that, they would not have been left alone. Then 'Adi returned to Khālid with [news of] their Islām, and Khālid set out toward al-Ansūr, intending [to confront] Jadilah. At this 'Adi said to him, "'Ṭayyī' is like a bird, and Jadilah is one of the wings of 'Ṭayyī'. So give me a few days' time; perhaps God will recover Jadilah just as he recovered al-Ghawth." So (Khālid) did so. 'Adi went to them and kept after them until they rendered the oath of allegiance to him, whereupon he brought (Khālid) [news of] their Islam. A thousand of their mounted warriors joined the Muslims. So ('Adi) was the best person born in the country of 'Ṭayyī' and the greatest of [the tribe], with regard to the blessing he brought upon them.

As for Hishām b. Muḥammad al-Kalbi, he alleged that, when Usamah and those of the army who had been with him returned, Abū Bakr became earnest about fighting the apostates and went out with the men. He [remained] with them until he encamped at Dhū al-Qassāh, one stage from Medina toward the Najd. There he put his armies in battle order, and then sent Khālid b. al-Walīd [to be] over the men. He put Thabit b. Qays over the Ansār, ordered him to [join] Khalid, and ordered (Khalid) to head for Ṭalhah and 'Uyaynah b. Hisn while the two of them were at Buzakhah, one of the wells of Banū

---

395. Lit., "their brothers" [ikhwāna-hum].
396. I.e., Tulayhah would not have let them go.
397. Perhaps here and several lines farther on we should translate "their submission."
398. According to Yāqūt, a well of 'Ṭayyī', this side of the sands [i.e., west of the sands of Nafūd and Shaqīq].
401. I.e., to join Khālid's army as a subordinate commander.
402. I.e., Tulayhah, here given in its regular form, rather than in the usual pejorative diminutive.
403. A chief of Fazarah; he opposed the Prophet at the Battle of the Ditch (Khandaq), later embraced Islam, then joined Tulayhah in apostasy. According to Ibn al-Kalbi, 'Uyaynah was a by-name of Ḫudhayfah b. Miṣān al-Ghalīf; see note 344, above; Caskel, II, 580. Tabari and Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, I, 390, IV, 166–67, clearly consider them different people.
Asad. (Abū Bakr)⁴⁰⁴ let it be known that he would go with those who were with him to meet (Khālid), [coming] from the direction of Khaybar; that was a ruse, as he had sent all the army with Khālid, but he wished to let the enemy know that in order to frighten them; then he returned to Medina. Khālid⁴⁰⁵ b. al-Walid marched until, when he came near the enemy, he sent out as scouts 'Ukkāshah b. Miḥṣan⁴⁰⁶ and Thābit b. Aqram, one of the Banū al-'Ajālān and an ally of the Anṣār.⁴⁰⁷ When the two of them got near the enemy, Tulayḥah and his brother Salamah came out to take a look.⁴⁰⁸ As for Salamah, it was not long before he killed Thābit. Tulayḥah called to his brother when he saw that he had finished off his opponent, [saying], "Help me with [my] man, for he is getting the better [of me]."⁴⁰⁹ So they teamed up against ('Ukkāshah) until they killed him; then they went back. Khālid advanced with the men until they passed the slain Thābit b. Aqram, unaware of him until the riding camels stepped on him with their feet. That distressed the Muslims greatly; then they looked, and lo, there prostrate before them was 'Ukkāshah b. Miḥṣan. So the Muslims were overcome with grief at that, and said, "Two of the leaders of the Muslims and two of their horsemen have been killed." So Khālid turned toward Tayyī'.

According to Hishām—Abū Mikhnaf—Sa'd b. Mujāhid—al-

---

⁴⁰⁴. The narrative shifts to direct speech (of Abū Bakr) for the first part of this sentence, but it has been converted to indirect speech in the translation to make it fit more smoothly with the rest of the account.

⁴⁰⁶. An Asadite, ally of 'Abd Shams (Umayyah clan of Quraysh) before Islam, an early settler in Medina, and one of the most prominent early companions of the Prophet, who promised him entry into paradise. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 1–2.

⁴⁰⁷. Banū 'Ajālān was a branch of the Hijāz section of the Bālī tribe. Thābit was an early convert in Medina; cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, I, 220; Caskel, II, 546.

⁴⁰⁸. Lit. "to see and to ask." At this point Nuwayrī, 72, inserts the following passage: "The two of them [Khālid and Salamah] met them both ['Ukkāshah and Thābit], whereupon Salamah challenged Thābit to single combat, and 'Ukkāshah challenged Tulayḥah."

⁴⁰⁹. 'Ākil, "devouring." See Glossary, s.v. Balansī, 39; Diyarbakri, II, 207; and Ibn Ḫubaysh, 21–22 have "for he is killing me."
Muḥill b. Khalifah—‘Adī b. Ḥātim: I sent to Khalīd b. al-Walid, [saying]: "March to me and remain with me a few days, so that I might send to the tribes of Ṭayyi' and gather for you from them more [men] than you have with you. Then I will accompany you to your enemy." So he marched to me.

According to Hishām—Abū Mikhnaf—‘Ābd al-Salām b. Sawayd—one of the Anṣār: When Khalīd saw how grief-stricken his companions were over the killing of Thābit and ‘Ukkāshah, he said to them, "Would you like me to repair with you to one of the tribes of the Arabs, whose numbers are great, whose might is strong, and among whom no one has apostatized from Islam?" To which the men replied, "And what tribe do you mean, what an excellent tribe it is, by God?" He said, "Ṭayyi'." At this they said, "May God give you success, what a good idea you have had!" So he went with them and stayed with the army among Ṭayyi'.

According to Hishām—Abū Mikhnaf—Iṣḥāq: He encamped at Aja', whereupon he put [the army] in order for war; then he marched until the two [forces] met at Buzākhah, while Banū Ṭāmir, 413 under their chiefs and leaders, were nearby listening and waiting expectantly [to see] who would be defeated. 414

According to Hishām—Abū Mikhnaf—Sa’d b. Mujāhid—elders of his tribe: 415 We asked Khalīd that we [be allowed to] protect

---

410. Or perhaps "weapons" or "valor": shawkah.
412. Yāqūt, s.v. "Uruk," confirms that Uruk is the city of Salmā (perhaps deriving his information from this account) and claims that it was in Ghatafān country.
413. Banū Ṭāmir b. Sa’sa’ah, a large tribal group of central Arabia that included such tribes as Klāb, Ka'b, Ṭāmir b. Rabī‘ah, Hīlāl, and Numayr, among others. Cf. EI², s.v. "Ṭāmir b. Sa’sa’ah" (W. Caskel).
415. His tribe was Ṭayyi'. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 347; Caetani, 609.
him against Qays,\footnote{Qays 'Aylān (or Qays b. 'Aylān) was a broad genealogical grouping that included the tribes of Ghatafan, Sulaym, Hawāzin, 'Amīr b. Ṣa'ṣa'ah, and others. Cf. Caskel, II, 462, s.v. "Qays b. al-Nās"; \textit{EL}, s.v. "Ḵays 'Aylān" (W. M. Watt). Presumably in the present context it is meant as a reference to Fazārah, as suggested by Landau-Tasseron, "The Participation of Ṭayyi' in the Ridda," 63. In this account the Ṭayyi' ask Khālid not to line them up against Asad, their former allies, when the battle is closed, but rather against Fazārah (E. Landau-Tasseron, personal communication).} for Banū Asad were our allies, so he said, "By God, Qays is not the weaker of the two powers; direct yourself at whichever of the two tribes you wish." Then 'Adi said: "If [even] the closest of my family and the closest of my tribe left this religion,\footnote{Kos and Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 347, have "If this came down on those who are the closest of my family..."} I would fight them because of it; so should I abstain from fighting Banū Asad because of their [former] alliance [with my tribe]? No, by the Eternal God, I will not!" At this, Khalid said to him: "Fighting against either of the two parties is [still] holy war [\textit{jihād}]. Do not oppose the opinion of your companions; [rather], proceed to one of the two parties and conduct [your companions] to the enemy they are most enthusiastic to fight."

Hishām—Abū Mikhnaf—'Abd al-Salām b. Suwayd: The horsemen of Ṭayyi' used to meet the horsemen of Banū Asad and Fazārah before the arrival of Khālid among them, and they would exchange words without fighting. Asad and Fazārah would say, "No, by God, we will never render the oath of allegiance to Abū al-Faṣil," whereupon the horsemen of Ṭayyi' would say to them, "I bear witness that [Abū Bakr] will fight you until you [will be willing to] call him "father of the greatest stud."\footnote{Cf. \textit{p. 61} and note 391, above, for an explanation of the plays on words.}"

Ibn Ḥumayd—Salama—Muḥammad b. Ishaq—Muḥammad b. Ṭalhah b. Yazīd b. Rukānāh—'Ubaydallāh b. 'Abdallāh b. Ṭūbah:\footnote{Cf. Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 347–48; Baladhuri, \textit{Futūh}, 96; Balansi, 35–36; Diyārbakri, II, 207 top; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 10 middle; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 21; Nuwayri, 72–73; Caetani, 614–15.} When the men fought, 'Uyaynah fought energetically on the side of Tulayḥah at the head of seven hundred of Banū Fazārah. Tulayḥah was wrapped up in a cloak of his in the courtyard of one of his hair tents, pretending to prophesy for them while the men were fighting. After the warfare had shaken 'Uyaynah and the fighting had become severe, he returned to Tulayhah and said to him, "Has Gabriel come to you yet?" He replied that he had not, so ['Uyaynah] returned to fight until, when the fighting became severe and the warfare shook him [again], he returned to him and said: "You bastard! Has Gabriel come to you yet?" [Tulayhah] replied, "No, by God." 'Uyaynah was uttering an oath: "How long will it be, by God? It has worn us out!" Then he returned to fight, until, when [the revelation] came, he returned to him and said, "Has Gabriel come to you yet?" [Tulayhah] said that he had, so he asked, "So what did he say to you?" He replied, "He told me that I have a millstone like his millstone, and a story that you shall not forget." 'Uyaynah said, "I think God knew that there would be a story you would not forget, Oh Banū Fazarah, in this way; so turn away, for by God this one is a liar." So they turned away, and the men were routed. Whereupon they came to Tulayhah, saying, "What do you order us [to do]?" Now he had made his horse ready near him, and prepared a camel for his wife al-Nawâr, so when they came to him and asked him what he ordered them to do, he stood up, jumped on his horse, and carried his wife to save her. [Then] he said, "Whoever of you can do as I have done and save his family, let him do so." Then he traveled by al-Jûshiyah until he

420. Lit., "May you have no father!"
421. Yaqûlu... hîlfa. E. Landau-Tasseron suggests that the text should perhaps be emended to yaqûlu... jilafan, "he said rudely." (personal communication).
422. Qad balaghâ minnâ.
423. Rahâ. The word has many significations—mill, molar tooth, high rugged ground, breast, tribe, chief, or any of several other meanings; see Ibn Manzûr, XIV, 314.
425. Diyârbakri, II, 297, and Ibn Ḥubaysî, 21, have: "... a matter you will not forget, Oh Fazarah, in this way"—and he pointed to them [standing] under the sun. 'This one, by God, is a liar... ." Ibn Ḥubaysî, 20, has "By God, I think we will have a story we won't forget."
426. Reading with Nuwayri, 73; text has "al-Ḫawshiyah." Al-Ḫawshiyah was, according to Yaqūt (s.v. "Ḫûsiyyah," second half of article), a town between Najd and Syria.
The Account about Ghaṭafân reached Syria. His gathering scattered, and God killed some of them. Banū 'Amir had been near them with their leaders and chiefs, and those tribes of Sulaym and Hawāzin were [also] in that state, but when God inflicted upon Ṭulayḥah and Fazārah which befell them, those [tribes] came, saying, "We enter into that which we had left, and we believe in God and His Apostle, and we accept His sovereignty over our property and ourselves."

Abū Ja’far said, the reason for the apostasy of 'Uyaynah and Ghaṭafân and those who apostatized of Ṭayyi' was [as follows]:

According to 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa’d—his uncle—Sayf, and according to al-Sarī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—Ṭalḥah b. al-A’lām—Ḥabīb b. Rabī’ah al-Asadi—’Umārah b. Fulān al-Asadi: Tulayḥah had apostatized in the lifetime of the Apostle of God, and had asserted a claim to prophecy, so the Prophet sent Dirār b. al-Azwar to his tax agents over the Banū Asad to find out about that, and ordered them to stand firm in that matter against all who apostatized. So they perturbed Tulayḥah and made him afraid. The Muslims encamped at Waridat, while the unbelievers encamped at Samirā, and the Muslims continued growing [in numbers] and the unbelievers decreasing until al-Dirār determined to march on Tulayḥah, so that he took everyone who remained peaceably, except for a blow that he struck [at Tulayḥah] with the cutting sword. But [the sword] shrunk from him, at which news of that blow spread among the army. Then, while they were in that state, the Muslims received the news of the death of their Prophet. People in the army said

429. ’Ummāl; sometimes the word seems to mean “governor” in a more general sense.
430. A place northeast of Samirā; cf. Yaqūt, s.v. and Thilo, s.v.
431. Reading with Kos and Cairo edition. The sentences that follow are confused; Nuwayri, 70, evidently in an attempt to smooth them out, has the following: “...so that he took everyone by surrender. Then he agreed to deliver a blow with a sword, so he shrank from him. [News of] that blow spread among the army, but they said, ‘The weapons will not affect Tulayḥah.’ So while the army was in that state, the news of the Prophet’s death reached them...”
432. I.e., the sword miraculously did not harm Tulayḥah.
about that blow, "Weapons will not affect Tulayhah." So from that day forth the Muslims knew decreasing [of numbers], and people scattered to Tulayhah and his situation was in the ascendant.\textsuperscript{433} Dhū al-Khimārayn 'Awf al- Ja'dhami\textsuperscript{434} approached so that he encamped opposite us. Thumāmah b. Aws b. Lām al-Ta'\textsuperscript{435} sent to him, "With me are 500 of Jadilah, so, if something should happen to you unexpectedly, we are at al-Qurdudah\textsuperscript{436} and al-Ansur just this side of the sands. And Muḥalhil b. Zayd sent to him, "With me are the army (ḥadd) of al-Ghawth, so if something should happen to you unexpectedly, we are on the flanks [of the mountains] facing Fayd.\textsuperscript{437} Tayyī' showed nothing but benevolence toward Dhū al-Khimārayn 'Awf because there had been an alliance in the jāhiliyyah among Asad and Ghatafān and Tayyī'; then, some time before the sending of the Prophet, Ghatafān and Asad gathered against Tayyī and forced them to leave the territory they had had in the jāhiliyyah, [both] Jadilah and Ghawth. 'Awf disliked that, so he broke with Ghatafān. The two tribes followed one another in emigration. 'Awf sent to these two tribes of Tayyī, renewing their alliance, and undertook to help them, so that they [were able to] return to their territories. That distressed Ghatafān; but, when the Apostle of God died, 'Uyaynah b. Ḥišn stood up among Ghatafān saying, "I no longer recognize the boundaries of Ghatafān since the termination of what was between us and Banū Asad, so I will renew the alliance that was between us of old and follow Tulayhah. By God,\textsuperscript{438} it is preferable for us to follow a prophet from our two allies than to follow a prophet from Quraysh. [In any \textsuperscript{433} Diyarbakri, II, 160, and Nuwayri, 70, gloss this passage, but the idea there also is clearly that the death of the Prophet strengthened Tulayhah and weakened the Muslims.

\textsuperscript{434} Jadhimah was a clan of Asad. Little information is available on Dhū al-Khimārayn, "the one with two veils"; cf. Wellhausen, Skizzen VI, 148; Landau-Tasseron, "The Participation of Tayyī," 58–59; Landau-Tasseron, "Asad," 21.

\textsuperscript{435} Lām b. 'Amr was a branch of the Jadilah clan of Tayyī; cf. Caskel, II, 376.

\textsuperscript{436} Yaqūt, s.v. "al-Qurdudah" offers a variation of this sentence but provides no further information on its location.

\textsuperscript{437} Or "at Al-Aknāf facing Fayd." Fayd is a well-known oasis on the Mecca-Kūfā road, just east of Mt. Salmā. Cf. Yaqūt, s.v.; Thilo, s.v. and Map B.

\textsuperscript{438} Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 342.
case] Muhammad has died, whereas Tulayhah remains." Then they agreed with his opinion, so he did [as he had proposed], and so did they. So when Ghaṭafān gathered to assist Tulayhah, Dirār and Qudā‘ī and Sinān439 and whoever [else] had undertaken some of the Prophet's work among Banū Asad fled to Abū Bakr. Those who had been with them were scattered, so they gave Abū Bakr the news and told him to exercise caution.440

Then Dirār b. al-Azwar said, "I have seen no one, other than the Apostle of God,441 who is more likely442 to carry out widespread war than Abū Bakr; for [when] we began to tell him [of it], it was as if we had informed him of something to his advantage, not [something] detrimental to him."

The delegations of Banū Asad and Ghaṭafān and Hawāzīn and Tāyyi443 came to him, and the delegations of Qudā‘ah encountered Usāmah b. Zayd, whereupon he led them to Abū Bakr, so they gathered in Medina, staying with the chiefs of the Muslims on the tenth [day] after the death of the Apostle of God. Then they proposed to do the ritual prayer, provided that they be exempted from the zakāt. A council of those who were lodging them agreed to accept that, so that they might attain what they desired. Every one of the chiefs of the Muslims lodged someone of them, except al-Abbas. Then they came to Abū Bakr to inform him of their tidings and of what their council had agreed on. But Abū Bakr did not [agree],444 for he refused [to accept] anything except what the Apostle of God had accepted. They refused [these terms], so he sent them back, giving them respite of a day and a night [to leave], whereupon they dispersed to their tribes.

439. Qudā‘ī b. 'Amr was the Prophet's tax agent over the Banū al-Ḥarīth of Asad, cf. Tabari I, 1798; Ibn al-Athir, Usd, IV, 305. Sinān b. Abī Sinān b. Miḥsan al-Asadi was an ally of 'Abd Shams (Umayyah—Quraysh) and an early convert to Islam; he was the Prophet's tax agent over the Banū Mālik of Asad; cf. Ibn al-Athir, Usd, II, 358. On Qudā‘ī and Sinān, cf. Landau-Tasseron, "Asad," 19.

440. Or "vigilant." Kos and Manuscript B omit the phrase.

441. Kos omits this phrase.

442. Amla'a "fuller," hence "more suitable, more capable, more inclined to," as suggested by Glossary.

443. Cf. pp. 44–45, and notes.

444. ʾilla mā kāna min Abī Bakr.
According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—al-Ḥajjāj—‘Amr b. Shu‘ayb: the Apostle of God had sent ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ to Jayfar upon his return from the farewell pilgrimage. Then the Apostle of God died, while ‘Amr was in ‘Uman; so he came until, when he reached al-Bahrayn, he found al-Mundhir b. Sāwī on the point of death. Whereupon al-Mundhir said to him, "Advise me with regard to my wealth in a matter that will be to my benefit and not to my detriment." He replied, "Give your real property as an almsgiving (ṣadaqah) that will continue after you." So he did that. Then (‘Amr) left him and marched among the Banū Tamīm; then he went from them to the territory of Banū ‘Amīr and stayed with Qurrah b. Hubayrah, while Qurrah was playing for time, and all the Banū ‘Amīr likewise, except for a few. Then (‘Amr) marched until he came to Medina; at this Quraysh gathered about him and asked him [for information]. So he informed them that armies were gathered together from Dabā to where he had reached them. At this they dispersed and formed circles. ‘Umar b. al-Ḵhaṭṭāb came to greet ‘Amr, and passed by a circle while they were [talking] about what they had heard from 'Amr. In that circle were 'Uthmān [b. 'Affān], 'Alī [b. Abī Ṭālib], Ṭalḥah [b. 'Ubaydallāh], al-Zubayr [b. al-'Awwām], 'Abd al-Rahmān [b. 'Awf], and Sa'd [b. Abī Waqqās].

When 'Umar drew near them, they fell silent; so he said, "What are you [talking] about?" But they did not answer him, so he said, "How well I know what you are meeting secretly about!"

At this Ṭalḥah grew angry and said, "By God, oh Ibn al-Khattāb, then tell us about the unseen!" He replied, "No one knows the unseen except God; but I think you were saying how much you fear for Quraysh because of the Arabs, and how likely (the Arabs) are not to affirm this cause."

When they said that he was right, he continued, "Do not fear this situation. By God, I am more afraid of what you might do to the Arabs than I am of what the Arabs might do to you! If you were to go into a hole in the ground, oh company of Quraysh, the Arabs would enter it after you. So be God-fearing in regard to them." He passed on to 'Amr and greeted him, and then returned to Abū Bakr.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Hishām b. 'Urwah—his father: Upon his return from 'Umān after the death of the Apostle of God, 'Amr b. al-'Āṣ stayed with Qurrah b. Hubayrāh b. Salamah b. Qushayr. Around him was an army of obscure groups (afnā') of Banū 'Āmir. Qurrah slaughtered him and honored his dwelling, and then, when ['Amr wished to resume traveling, Qurrah met with him privately and said to him, "Hey you, the Arabs will not be pleased with you by the [demand for] tribute (al-itdawh). If you spare them the taking of their wealth, they will listen to you and obey, but if you deny [that] I do not think they would gather to you." At this 'Amr replied, "Have you become an unbeliever, Oh Qurrah?" Now around Qurrah were the Banū 'Āmir, and Qurrah hated to make the fact that they were following [him] known, lest they should deny following him, with the result that he would end up in a

---

455. All leading early converts to Islam, and later the six members of the council that selected 'Uthmān to be the third caliph.
457. I.e., slaughtered animals for a feast.
disastrous [situation]. So he said, “We shall send you back to your old ways [he had been a Muslim]. Let’s set a date between us and you [to do battle].” Whereupon ‘Amr said, “Do you threaten us with the Arabs and try to frighten us with them? Your alliance is [no better than] your mother’s knick-knacks! By God, I shall make the cavalry trample you!” And he came to Abū Bakr and the Muslims and gave them the news.

According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishaq: When Khalid was done with the matter of Banū ʿĀmir and their taking the oath of allegiance accepting [the conditions] that he imposed on them, he bound ʿUyaynah b. Ḥiṣn and Qurrah b. Hubayrah to send them to Abū Bakr. When they came before him, Qurrah said to him, “Oh Caliph of the Apostle of God, I had been a Muslim, and I have a witness to that—to my Islam—in ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ, [for] he passed by me, whereupon I honored him and showed favor to him and protected him.” So Abū Bakr summoned ʿAmr b. al-ʿĀṣ, saying, “What do you know about the affairs of this [man]?” Thereupon [ʿAmr] told him the story until he got to what (Qurrah) had said to him regarding the ṣadaqah tax, [at which] Qurrah said to him, “Let that be enough for you, may God have mercy on you!” [But] [ʿAmr] said, “By God, not until I have informed him of everything that you said.” So he related [it] to him, but Abū Bakr pardoned (Qurrah) and spared his life.

---

458. Reading a-tuʿīdunā with Cairo ed. and manuscript B for a-tuwāʿīdunā in the text.
459. Text: hifsh; Cairo: hafsh, meaning “your mother’s lowly hut,” or “incense box” or “box for spindles,” etc., in any case, intended as a demigration of Qurrah’s promise.
460. Reading with the Cairo edition.
his hands bound to his neck with a rope informed me that the boys of Medina used to prick him with palm branches, saying, "Oh enemy of God, have you become an unbeliever after acknowledging your faith?" Whereupon he would say, "By God, I never believed in God." But Abu Bakr pardoned him and spared his life.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf:465 The Muslims took a man of Banū Asad, so he was brought to Khālid at al-Ghamr.466 He was knowledgeable about the affairs of Ṭulayḥah, so Khālid said to him, "Tell us about him and about what he says to you." Whereupon he alleged that among the things he brought [as revelation] was: "By the doves and the wild pigeons, by the famished sparrow hawk, they fasted before you by years, may our kingship reach Iraq and Syria."468

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Abū Ya‘qūb Sa‘īd b. ‘Ubaydah:469 When the people of al-Ghamr took refuge at al-Buzākhah, Ṭulayḥah stood up among them. Then he said, "I order you to make a millstone with handles,470 with which God can grind up those whom He will, and upon which He may throw down those whom He will." Then he put his armies in battle order. After that he said,472 "Send two horsemen on two dark horses of Banū Naṣr b. Qu‘ayn,473 bringing you a spy." So they sent out two horsemen of Banū Qu‘ayn, whereupon he and [his brother] Salamah went out as two lookouts.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—‘Abdallāh b. Sa‘īd b. Thābit b. al-Jidḥ—‘Abd al-Rahmān b. Ka‘b474—those of the 466. A well of Asad, evidently just south of Mt. Aja‘; cf. Yāqūt, s.v.; Thilo, s.v. and Map B.

---

467. Text and Nuwayrī, 70: "stood surety" [l]; we read with Cairo edition.
468. This passage, like the one at the end of the next paragraph, is couched in rhymed prose reminiscent of the Qur‘ān; unlike the Qur‘ān, however, the doggerel attributed to Ṭulayḥah has a ludicrous or comic effect.
469. Cf. Balansi, 33, from third sentence onwards; Caetani, 605–6.
470. Raḥān dhātu ‘uran.
471. Lit., "strike, smite": asāba.
472. Cf. Ibn Hubaysh, 19, l. 16f.
Anṣār who witnessed Buzākhah: At Buzākhah Khālid did not capture a single family; the families of Banū Asad were guarded. [According to Abū Ya`qūb: [the families of Asad were] between Mithqab and Falj,475 and the families of Qays were between Falj and Wāsīt.476] So no sooner were they defeated than they all recognized  İslām out of fear for [their] off-spring, and protected themselves from Khālid by honoring his demands,477 and claimed [assurances of] safety. Ğūlah went on until he descended among Kalb at al-Naq;479 then he embraced  İslām and remained staying among Kalb until Abū Bakr died. He embraced  İslām there when he had learned that Asad and Chaṭafān and ʿĀmir had embraced  İslām. Then he went out toward Mecca to make the `umrah480 during the reign of Abū Bakr, and passed by Medina. At this Abū Bakr was told that this was Ğūlah; but he said, “What should I do to him? Leave him alone; for God has guided him to Islam.” Ğūlah continued toward Mecca and performed his `umrah. Then he came to ʿUmar to render the oath of allegiance when he assumed the caliphate. So ʿUmar said to him, “You are the murderer of `Ukkāshah and Thābit; by God, I do not like you at all.” To which he replied, “Oh Commander of the Faithful, why are you troubled by two men whom God ennobled by my hand,481 when He did not disgrace me through their hands?” So ʿUmar accepted the oath of allegiance from him; then he said to him, “You imposter, what is left of your soothsaying?” He replied, “A puff or two in the bellows.” Then he returned to the territory of his tribe and remained in it until he left for Iraq.

475. Yāqūt is vague on Mithqab, there being several places with the name. Falj (or Batn Falj) is a wide valley in northeast Arabia, stretching toward Basrah in Iraq; cf. Yāqūt, s.v., Thilo, s.v. and Map B.

476. Wāsīt is, again, difficult to localize, since many places bore this name.

480. The “lesser pilgrimage” to Mecca.

481. I.e., by making them martyrs.
The Apostasy of Hawāzīn, Sulaym, and ‘Āmir

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl and ‘Abdallāh:482
As for Banū ‘Āmir, they played for time while they looked to see what Asad and Ghaṭafān would do. So when they were surrounded while Banū ‘Āmir was under their leaders and chiefs, Qurrah b. Hubayrah was among Ka‘b483 and their allies, and ‘Alqamah b. ‘Ulāthah among Kilāb484 and their allies. Now ‘Alqamah had embraced Islam and then apostatized in the time of the Prophet; then he went out after the [Prophet’s] conquest of al-Ṭā‘if until he reached Syria. So when the Prophet died, (‘Alqamah) came back hurriedly so that he encamped among the Banū Ka‘b, playing for time. Abū Bakr learned of that, so he sent a raiding party to him, putting al-Qa‘qa‘ b. ‘Amr485 in command of it. He said, “Oh Qa‘qa‘, march until you raid ‘Alqamah b. ‘Ulāthah. Perhaps you will take him [captive] for me or kill him; [but] know that the [only] remedy for a tear is to stitch it up, so do what you must.” So he went out at the head of this raiding party until he raided the spring where ‘Alqamah was. (‘Alqamah) was still holding back, so he made an effort to outdistance them on his horse and escaped them.486 His family487 and his children embraced Islām, so (al-Qa‘qa‘) carried off his wife and his daughters and his [other] womenfolk and those men who stood fast, who protected themselves from him through submission (islām). Then he brought them before Abū Bakr, whereupon ‘Alqamah’s children and his wife denied that they had assisted him while they were staying in [his] household. That was all (Abu Bakr) learned,488 and 483. Ka‘b b. Rabi‘ah was the subsection of ‘Amir b. Ṣa‘ṣa‘ah to which Qurrah’s tribe, Qushayr, belonged.

484. Kilāb b. Rabi‘ah was a tribe of the ‘Amir b. Ṣa‘ṣa‘ah group residing in west central Arabia, east of Medina. ‘Ulāthah was a chief of Kilāb, whom the Prophet made a special effort to win over following the conquest of Mecca in A.H. 8.
488. I.e., he learned no incriminating information about them.
they said, “What is our fault in what ‘Alqamah did in this situation?” So (Abū Bakr) set them free. Afterward (‘Alqamah) submitted,489 so (Abū Bakr) accepted that from him.

According to al-Sarī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—Abū ‘Amr and Abū Ḍamrah—Ibn Sirīn: A similar account.490 After the defeat of the people of Buzākhah, Banū ‘Āmir came, saying, “Let us enter that which we had left,” so he491 made an agreement with them on [the same terms] that the people of Buzākhah from Asad and Ghatafan and Ṭayyi’ had agreed to before them. They gave him their hands492 to Islam. The only thing he would accept from anyone of Asad or Ghatafan or Hawāzin493 or Sulaym or Ṭayyi’ was that they bring him those who during their apostasy had burned the people of Islām and mutilated them494 and waged aggression against them; so they brought them to him, whereupon he accepted that from them [as atonement] except for Qurrah b. Hubayrah495 and some people with him whom he fettered. He mutilated those who had waged aggression against Islām by burning them with fire, smashing them with rocks, throwing them down from mountains, casting them headlong into wells, and piercing them with arrows; and he sent Qurrah and the [other] prisoners496 and wrote to Abū Bakr, “Banū ‘Āmir has come forward after being reluctant, and entered Islām after awaiting [the outcome of things]. I have accepted nothing from anyone, whether he fought me or made peace with me, until he brought me whoever waged aggression against the Muslims; those I have killed by every means of slaughter. And I have sent you Qurrah and his companions.”

According to al-Sarī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—Abū ‘Amr—Nāfi’: Abū Bakr wrote to Khālid, “May that which God has granted you by way of blessings increase for you! Fear God in your affairs, for

---

489. Or: embraced Islām.
491. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, says “Khālid.”
492. This refers to the traditional hand clasp symbolizing the bay’ah, or oath of allegiance.
493. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, has ‘Āmir.
494. Here and below, maththala, “to mutilate” or “to punish severely.”
495. Cf. Wathima, 7/46.
496. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, adds: “and Zuhayr.”
verily God is with those who are pious and who do good works. Take seriously the command of God and be not remiss; for you shall not be victorious over anyone who fought the Muslims unless you fight him and, by punishing him as an example, warn another. So kill whomever you like of those who showed enmity to God or who opposed Him, [if] you think there will be some benefit in doing so." Hence (Khālid) remained in al-Buzākhah for a month, going 'round about it497 and returning to it in pursuit of those [evildoers]; so that some of them were burned and some cut to pieces and some smashed with rocks and some thrown from mountaintops. He brought Qurrah and his companions, but they did not encamp, nor was there said to them what had been said to 'Uyaynah and his companions,498 because they were not in the same situation and had not done the things [the companions] had done.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl and Abū Ya‘qūb,499 The shattered remnants of Ghatafan500 gathered at Zafar.501 With them was Umm Ziml Salma, daughter of Mālik b. Hudhayfah b. Badr; she resembled her mother Umm Qirfah, daughter of Rabī‘ah b. Fulān b. Badr.502 Now Umm Qirfah had been [married] to Mālik b. Hudhayfah and bore him Qirfah, Ḥakamah, Ḥurāshah,503 Ziml, Ḥuṣayn, Sharīk, ‘Abd, Zufar, Mu‘āwiyyah, Ḥamalah, Qays, and La‘y. As for Ḥakamah, the Apostle of God killed him on the day ‘Uyaynah b. Hisn raided the livestock of Medina; Abū Qatādah [actually] killed him. So those shattered remnants rallied around Salma; she was as renowned as her mother [had been], and she had Umm Qirfah's camel, so (Ghatafan) encamped with her. Then she stirred them [1902]

497. Lit., "ascending and descending from it."
498. Cf. P. 73, above.
500. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, has "Ghatafan and Tayyi' and Sulaym and Hawāzin and others." Cf. list on p. 78, below.
501. Yaqūt, s.v., places this near Ḥaw‘ab on the Basrah-Mecca road, but the localization is probably derived from this account; cf. p. 78 and note 505, below.
503. Caskel, I, Table 130, has "Khurāshah."
up and commanded them to make war, and marched about at the head of them summoning them to make war on Khālid, until they [all] gathered about her. They became encouraged on that account, and solitary remnants congregated to them from every side. [[Back] in the days of Umm Qirfah, [Salmā] had been taken captive and had fallen to ‘Ā’ishah, who then set her free, so that [Salmā] used to be with her. Subsequently [Salmā] returned to her own tribe. Now one day504 the Prophet called on them and said, “Verily, one of you [women] will make the dogs of Ḥaw’ab505 bark.” Salmā caused that to happen when she apostatized and demanded that vengeance.) Then she marched about between Zafar and al-Ḥaw’ab to gather [followers] to herself, whereupon every company of vanquished warriors and every oppressed person from those clans of ḡaṭaṣfān and Hawāzīn and Sulaym and Asad and Ṭayyī rallied to her. So when Khalid learned of that, while he was engaged in exacting vengeance and taking ṣadaqah tax and calling people [to Islām] and calming them down, he marched to the woman. Her situation had grown grave and her case was serious, so he fell upon her and her followers; then they fought intensely while she was standing on her mother’s camel with the same bravery as [her mother]. People began to say, “Whoever goads her camel shall have one hundred camels because of her fame.” [Many] noble families of Khāṣi506 and Ḥāribah507 and Ghann508 perished on that day, [Abū Ja’far [al-Ṭabarī] said: Khāṣi’ is a clan of Ghanm.) and 504. That is, one day when she was still in ‘Ā’ishah’s household.

---

505. Haw’ab was a well on the Baṣrah road in the territory of Bānū Abū Bakr b. Kilāb, south of Ḥimā Ḍaryyyah, 325 km east of Medina. Cf. Yaqūt, s.v. and Thilo, s.v.
506. Cairo has Jās; Emendanda proposes Jalas; Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 148 suggests Jāṣi, a branch of Dhubyān, and says that Ṭabarī’s note equating them with Ghanm is not right. Ibn al-Athir, Lubāb, relates “al-Jāṣi” to a branch of Fazārah—Lawdhān, but no one else knows of it. Perhaps we should read Jassās [b. ‘Amr], the name of a family of Fazārah; cf. Caskel, II, 260 and Ibn Ḥazm, Jamḥarat ansāb al-‘Arab [Cairo 1971], 256.
507. Ḥāribah b. Dhubyān was a declining branch of Dhubyān [Caskel, II, 279].
508. Possibly Ghann b. ‘Abdallāh of ḡaṭaṣfān. The Cairo edition [index] identifies it as Ghann of Bānū Ḥadas, but according to Ibn al-Kalbī, Ḥadas was a clan of Lakhm from Transjordan, and seems to have included no subclan named Ghann. [Caskel, II, 290].
among the people [many] were struck down of Kāhil.\(^509\) Their fighting was intense until some horsemen gathered around [Salmā’s] camel, wounding it and killing her. Around her camel were slain a hundred men. [Khālid] sent [news of] the victory, so that it arrived about twenty days after [the arrival of] Qurrah.\(^1903\)

According to al-Sārī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl and Abū Ya‘qūb:\(^510\) The story of al-Jiwa‘ and Nā‘ir\(^511\) was that al-Fujā‘ah Iyās b. Abd Yāli\(^512\) came to Abū Bakr saying, “Assist me with weapons and order me [to fight] whomever you wish of the apostates.” So [Abū Bakr] gave him weapons and gave him his command. But he disobeyed his command with regard to the Muslims, going out until he camped at al-Jiwa‘, and he sent Najabah\(^513\) b. Abū al-Maythā‘ from the Banū al-Sharīd\(^514\) and ordered him against the Muslims. So he launched them in a raid against every Muslim amongst Sulaym, ‘Āmir and Hawāzin. Abū Bakr learned of that, so he sent to Tūrayfah b. Hájiz\(^515\) ordering him to gather [men] to himself and to march against [al-Fujā‘ah]; and he sent ‘Abdallāh b. Qays al-Jāṣi\(^516\) to him by way of reinforcement, so he [went]. Then the two of them rose up against [al-Fujā‘ah] and pursued him, so he began to seek shelter from the two of them until they caught up with him at al-Jiwa‘, whereupon they fought. Najabah was killed and Fujā‘ah fled, so Tūrayfah followed him and took him captive, sending him to Abū Bakr. [When] he was brought to Abū Bakr he \(^{509}\) Presumably Kāhil b. Asad; cf. Caskel, II, 368. However, kāhil may have a more general sense, meaning “those upon whom [people] relied.”

\(^{511}\) According to Yāqūt, al-Jiwa‘ was a well in the Ḥimā Darīyyah, ca. 325 km east of Medina. Yāqūt’s localization of Nā‘ir is derived from this account.

\(^{512}\) Baladhurī, Futūḥ, 98: “al-Fujā‘ah, who was Buṣayr b. Iyās b. ‘Abdallāh al-Sulāmī.” Caskel, II, 228–29 and 247: Buṣayrah b. Iyās of Banū ‘Amīrah of Sulaym, noting that the manuscript of Ibn al-Kalbī has “Bāḥirah.”

\(^{513}\) Ibn al-Athīr, Kamīl, II, 350: Nukḥḥah.

\(^{514}\) Sharīd b. Riyāḥ was a branch of Sulaym (Caskel, II, 527).

ordered a fire to be kindled with much firewood in the prayer yard (muṣalla) of Medina and threw him, with arms and legs bound, into it.

According to Abū Jaʿfar—Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Muḥammad b. ʿIṣḥāq—ʿAbdallāh b. Abī Bakr, regarding the affair of al-Fujāʾah. A man of Banū Sulaym came to Abū Bakr. He was ʿIyās b. ʿAbdallāh b. ʿAbd Yālīl b. ʿUmayrah b. Khufāf, called al-Fujāʾah. He said to Abū Bakr, “I am a Muslim, and I want to fight those unbelievers who have apostatized; so give me a mount and help me.” So Abū Bakr mounted him upon camels and gave him weapons, whereupon he went forth indiscriminately against the people, Muslim and apostate [alike], taking their property and striking whoever of them tried to resist. With him was a man of Banū al-Sharid named Najabah b. Abī al-Maythāʼ. So when Abū Bakr received news of him, he wrote to Ṭurayfah b. Ḥājiz: “The enemy of God al-Fujāʾah came to me, alleging that he was a Muslin, and asked me to empower him over those who apostatized from İslām, so I mounted him and armed him. Then absolutely certain information reached me that the enemy of God has gone forth indiscriminately against the people, the Muslim and the apostate [alike], taking their property and killing whoever of them opposes him. So march against him with whatever Muslims are with you until you kill him or take him [captive] to bring to me.” Ṭurayfah b. Ḥājiz duly marched against (al-Fujāʾah). Then when the people met they shot arrows back and forth, whereupon Najabah b. Abī al-Maythāʼ was killed by an arrow shot at him. So when al-Fujāʾah saw the earnestness of the Muslims, he said to Ṭurayfah, “By God, you are no more entitled to command than I am; you are a commander of Abū Bakr, and I [likewise] am his commander.” At this Ṭurayfah said to him, “If you are telling the truth, then lay down your weapons and depart with me to Abū Bakr.” So he went out with him. Then when the two of them approached Abū Bakr, he ordered Ṭurayfah b. Ḥājiz to take him out to this clearing and burn him in it with fire. So Ṭurayfah took him

---

517. Balansî, 126–28; Caetani, 625.
518. Jihād, lit. “to strive against.”
519. Al-baqiʾ, perhaps a reference to Baqiʾ al-Gharqad, the famous Muslim cemetery in Medina.
out to the prayer yard and kindled a fire for him and threw him into it.

Khufāf b. Nudbah (Khufāf b. 'Umayr)\textsuperscript{520} said, in reference to al-Fujā'ah and what he did:

Why did they take his weapons to fight him even though those are sins in the eyes of God? Their religion [din] is not my religion,\textsuperscript{521} but I am not one causing error,\textsuperscript{522} until Shamām\textsuperscript{523} marches to al-Ṭarāt.\textsuperscript{524}

According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishaq—'Abdallāh b. Abī Bakr:\textsuperscript{525} Some of Sulaym b. Manṣūr had rebelled and returned [to being] unbelievers, while others had stood fast in Islām with a commander of Abū Bakr's over them named Ma'ān b. Ḥājīz, one of the Banū Ḥāritha.\textsuperscript{526} So when Khālid b. al-Walid marched against Ṭulayhah and his companions, he wrote to Ma'ān b. Ḥājīz to march with those of Banū Sulaym who had stood fast with him in Islām, [so that they might join] with Khālid. So (Ma'ān) marched, leaving in charge of his duties\textsuperscript{527} his brother Turayfah b. Ḥājīz. Abū Shajarah b. 'Abd al-'Uzza\textsuperscript{528} had joined the apostates at the head of those of Sulaym who did so. He was the son of al-Khansa',\textsuperscript{529} and said:\textsuperscript{530}

\textsuperscript{520} A black poet and warrior of Banū Sharid; he fought on the Prophet's side at Hunayn and did not defect from Islam. Nudbah was his mother's name, 'Umayr his father's. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, II, 118–19; Caskel, II, 348.

\textsuperscript{521} An allusion to Qur'ān Io9:6.

\textsuperscript{522} Cairo: "I am not [one] of them." Cairo notes that the Asma'īyyat has "I am not an unbeliever."

\textsuperscript{523} A mountain of Bāhilah, ca. 200 km west of al-Yamāmah. Cf. Yāqūt, s.v.; Ibn Manṣūr, XII, 327; Thilo, s.v. and Map D.

\textsuperscript{524} A well-known mountain in Najd, according to Yāqūt, s.v. The sense of the verse is that the speaker would never cause error, not until one mountain moved to another.

\textsuperscript{525} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 351; Balādhuri, Futūḥ, 97–98; Balansi, 126; Caetani, 579.

\textsuperscript{526} A brother of Turayfah b. Ḥājīz of Sulaym, and one of the Prophet's tax agents over part of his tribe. Cf. Shoufani, 138–39.

\textsuperscript{527} 'Amal, i.e., collection of tax.

\textsuperscript{528} Cf. Wathīmah, 10/49–50; Caskel, II, 168, s.v. "'Amr b. 'Abdal'uzzāa" poet of Sulaym.

\textsuperscript{529} A famous poetess of Sulaym and early convert to Islam, proper name Tūmādār bt. 'Amr, cf. Caskel, II, 546.

\textsuperscript{530} Cf. Ibn Ḥajar, Isābah, IV, 101 [no. 609], s.v. "Abū Shajarah al-Sulami."
So if she asked about us on the morning of Murāmir\textsuperscript{531}
As I would have asked about her if I had been distant from her,
The encounter of Banū Fihr\textsuperscript{532}—their encounter\textsuperscript{533} on the morning of al-Jiwā' was a necessity, so I fulfilled it.
I restrained for them my soul, and steered my filly into the mêlée until the dark bay in her reddened.
When she shied away from some courageous armed man I wanted,
I turned her chest toward him and guided her on.

When he apostatized from Islām, Abū Shajarah said:\textsuperscript{534} has Khalid meeting Sulaym at "Jaww Qurāqir" or al-Nuqrah, but De Goeje notes that the text should probably read "Jaww Murāmir." On this basis Wellhausen suggested that Murāmir/Jaww Murāmir should probably be identified with al-Jiwā' (see following lines). For this line, Ibn Hajar has "If Salmā asked on the morning about a man."

\textbf{532} Banū Fihr b. Mālik, that is, Quraysh. Cf. Caskel, II, 246.

\textbf{533} Ibn Hajar has "The mêlée (ti'ān) among the Lu'ayy b. Ghālib." Lu'ayy is another way of referring to most of Quraysh, specifically the "Quraysh al-Bitāh" or "inner Quraysh" of the city of Mecca; cf. Caskel, II, 246, and Watt, \textit{Mecca}, 5ff.

When opposing him [was] a great and well-armed troop that shakes its lance, you see the black mixed with white, and the coats of mail, [glinting] in their ranks.
So I quenched the thirst of my lance from Khālid’s squadron, and I hope after it that I may live long.

Then Abū Shajarah embraced Islam, and entered into that which which the people had entered. He came to Medina in the time of ’Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb.

According to Ibn Humayd—Salamah—Muḥammad b. Ishāq—’Abd al-Raḥmān b. Anas al-Sulamī—men of his tribe, and according to al-Sarī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—Sahl and Abū Ya’qūb and Muhammad b. Marzūq, and according to Hishām—Abū Mikhnaf—’Abd al-Raḥmān b. Qays al-Sulamī:535 (Abū Shajarah) made his camel kneel in the high ground of the Banū Qurayzhah. Then he came to ’Umar while he was giving the destitute some ṣadaqah tax and dividing it among the poor of the Arabs, so he said, “Oh commander of the believers, give [some to] me, for I am needy.” [’Umar] said, “And who are you?” [When] he said that he was Abū Shajarah b. ’Abd al-‘Uzza al-Sulamī, (’Umar) replied, “Abū Shajarah! Oh enemy of God, are you not the one who said: ‘So I quenched the thirst of my lance from Khālid’s squadron, and I hope after it that I may live long’?” Then he began to strike (Abū Shajarah) on the head with the whip, until he outran him, returned to his she-camel, and rode off on her. Then he made her go at an easy pace536 in the Ḩarrat Shawrān537 on his way back to the territory of Banū Sulaym, and said:

Abū Ḥafs538 was stingy to us with his favor, though everyone who shakes a tree some day gets leaves.539

---

537. According to Yāqūt, s.v. “Shawrān,” a valley in Sulaym country 3 miles from Medina; also a mountain on the left when leaving Medina for Mecca. Cf. Lecker, Banū Sulaym, 51.
538. I.e., ’Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb.
539. Wāraq, “leaves,” also means “silver” or “silver coins.”
He continued to oppress me until I abased myself to him and fear kept [me] from some covetousness.\textsuperscript{540}

When I dreaded\textsuperscript{541} Abū Hafs and his police\textsuperscript{542}— for an old man sometimes is consumed with fear\textsuperscript{543} and loses his judgment—

Then I turned to her while she was charging ahead,\textsuperscript{544} [running] like the flushed-out prey for which no leaf [of cover] grows.\textsuperscript{545}

I steered her forward to the path of Shawrān; indeed, I scolded her [to go faster] as she went.

Flint of the mountains of Abānī\textsuperscript{546} flies from her soles,\textsuperscript{547} as silver is selected out\textsuperscript{548} by the money changer.

When confronted by an open desert, she contends with it rashly; if you ask her to be quick, her soles\textsuperscript{549} hardly touch the ground.

Her hindquarters are impatient with her forequarters [when running]; she is fleet of foot, thrusting her neck [forward].

\textit{Banū Tamīm and the Affair of Sajāh bt. al-Ḥārith b. Suwayd}

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—al-Ṣa‘b b. ‘Aṭīyyah b. Bilāl—his father and Sahm b. Minjāb:\textsuperscript{550} The situation among Banū \textsuperscript{540} Balansi, 132, has “and weariesome distance kept [me] from some goal” [\textit{wa ḥāla min dūna baḍ al-bughyati al-shuqaqu}].

\textsuperscript{541} Balansi, 133, has “met.”

\textsuperscript{542} Shurtah.

\textsuperscript{543} Balansi, 133, has “sometimes strikes.”

\textsuperscript{544} jānīḥah; i.e., he turned to his she-camel to escape. Cf. Ibn Manzūr, II, 429.

\textsuperscript{545} Numerous divergent readings of this half-line exist, none of which is entirely satisfactory, as noted by the editor.

\textsuperscript{546} Two mountains in Fazarah country northeast of Medina. Cf. Yāqūt, s.v. “Abān” and “Abānān.”

\textsuperscript{547} Balansi, 133: “She flies, vehemently driving [? mardā] her paces from her soles.”

\textsuperscript{548} Balansi, 133: “scrutinized.” Balansi ends with this verse.

\textsuperscript{549} Cf. Ibn Manzūr, X, 75, s.v. “khurq.”

\textsuperscript{550} Cf. Nuwayri, 75–77 [as far as p. 90, below]; Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, III, 353–55, who adds Sahm b. Minjāb to the list of tax collectors [as far as p. 94,
Banū Tamim and the Affair of Sajāḥ bt. al-Ḥārith

Tamīm was that the Apostle of God died, having sent among them his tax collectors ('ummāl), such that al-Zibrīqān b. Badr was [placed] over al-Riḥāb,551 and 'Awf and the Ābnāa',552 and Qays b. Āṣim553 was over Muqā'īs554 and the Buṭūn clans, and Ṣafwān b. Ṣafwān and Sabrah b. 'Amr555 were over Banū 'Amr, the former over Bahdā and the latter over Khaddām,556 two tribes of Banū Tamīm; and Waki' b. Mālik557 and Mālik b. Nuwayrah over Banū Ḥanẓalah,558 the former over Banū Malik and the latter over Banū Yarbu'. When the news of the death of the Prophet came to Ṣafwān, he struck out for Abū Bakr with the sadqah taxes of Banū 'Amr, of which he was in charge, and with that of which Sabrah had charge. Sabrah remained among his tribe in case some misfortune should overcome the tribe.559 Qays had remained silent [waiting] to see what al-Zibrīqān might do, while al-Zibrīqān was reproving him; and scarcely did

551. A group of tribes, most of them closely allied to Tamīm, including Banū Dabbāh b. 'Udd and 'Adī, Taym, 'Ukl, and Thawr b. 'Abd Manāt b. 'Udd; cf. Caskel, II, 8 and 486.
552. 'Awf b. Ka'b was the section of Sa'd b. Zayd-manāt b. Tamīm to which Zibrīqān belonged. The Ābnāa' ("sons") was the collective term for eight other lineages of Sa'd b. Zayd-manāt b. Tamīm, not including Ka'b and 'Amr, who together were known as "al-Buṭūn" [Caskel, I, Tables 75 and 77, and II, 230].
553. Renowned as a man of tact and good judgment; of Muqā'īs/Tamīm, he came in the Tamīm delegation to the Prophet, who praised him as "lord of the nomads" [Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 219].
554. Muqā'īs was probably a lineage of Sa'd/Tamīm, although Sayf presents it as an alliance of Tamīm clans; cf. Caskel, II, 431.
555. He had been in the Tamīm delegation to the Prophet, according to Ibn Isḥāq [Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, II, 259–60].
556. 'Amr b. Tamīm was one of the main nomadic sections of the tribe; Cf. Caskel, II, 8 and 184–85. Ibn al-Kalbi knows neither Bahdā nor Khaddām; the former may be Bahdalah b. 'Awf, a lineage of the Sa'd/Tamīm [Caskel, II, 220].
557. Ibn Ḥajar, Isrā'īl, s.v., citing Sayf b. 'Umar and Ṭabarī, says he was of the Darīm clan of Tamīm.
558. Ḥanẓalah b. Mālik was a group of Tamīm clans including Mālik and Yarbu' [Caskel, II, 298].
559. Reading li-hadathin 'in nāba al-qawma, along with Cairo, instead of Leiden's li-hadathi arbabin, which generated problematic "solutions" from both Wellhausen [Skizzen, VI, 148] and De Goeje [Emendanda]. Cairo's reading seems to derive from Nuwayrī, 75 bottom.
(Qays) flatter him before al-Zibrīqān impugned him for his good fortune and high standing. 560 Qays said while he was waiting to see what he would do to oppose him when he was stalling on him, "Woe to us from the son of the "Uklī woman! 561 By God, he has slandered me so that I do not know what to do. If I had followed Abū Bakr and brought the ṣadaqah tax to him, (al-Zibrīqān) would have slaughtered (the camels)562 [I had collected as tax] among the Banū Sa'd and blackened my name563 among them; [on the other hand,] if I had slaughtered them among the Banū Sa'd, (al-Zibrīqān) would have come to Abū Bakr and blackened my name with him." So Qays determined to divide it among the Muqā'īs and the Buṭūn, and did so; while al-Zibrīqān determined on full payment, so he followed Ṣafwān with the ṣadaqah taxes of al-Ribāb and 'Awf and al-Abnā' until he brought them to Medina, saying in reference to Qays:

I paid in full the several camels564 [due to] the Apostle, when the collectors [of ṣadaqah tax] had refused, and not a camel had been paid [to him] by its trustee.565

The clans dispersed, and evil flared up [among them] and they kept each other busy, one occupying another; then Qays repented after that, so when al-'Alā' b. al-Ḥadramī drew near him he sent out its ṣadaqah tax566 and received (al-'Alā') with it. Then (Qays) went out with him, and said about that:

Indeed! Send Quraysh news of me by letter, since evidence of the deposits [of tax] has come to them.

---

560. Reading ḥāzwaḥ, "high standing," along with Cairo, instead of khaṭwaḥ in the text.
561. Presumably al-Zibrīqān's mother was of the tribe of 'Uklī, a part of the confederation of al-Ribāb. The antecedents of the many pronouns in this sentence are uncertain; presumably Qays was waiting to see what al-Zibrīqān would do.
562. The ṣadaqah tax or tribute was paid in camels or other livestock.
563. Reading yusawwīdu-ni, with text and Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 148, rather than Emendanda's yasūdu-ni, "conquered/overcame me."
564. Adhwād. The singular (dhawd) is defined variously as a number of camels between two and nine, or between three and thirty, etc.
565. Cf. p. 140, below for a more complete version of this poem.
566. I.e., presumably the ṣadaqah camels Qays had once collected among the Muqā'īs and Buṭūn clans of Tamīm, but had redivided among them.
In this circumstance ‘Awf and the Abnā’ were kept busy by the Buṭūn, and al-Ribāb by Muqā‘is; and Khaddām were occupied by Mālik, and Bahdā by Yarbū’. Sabrah b. ‘Amr was in charge of Khaddām; that was what he had been appointed over as successor for Ṣafwān.\(^{567}\) Al-Ḥuṣayn b. Niyār\(^{568}\) was in charge of Bahdā and al-Ribāb.\(^{569}\) ‘Abdallāh b. Ṣafwān\(^{570}\) was in charge of Dabbah, and ‘Īsmāḥ b. Ubayr\(^{571}\) was in charge of ‘Abd Manāt. In charge of ‘Awf and the Abnā’ was ‘Awf b. al-Bilād b. Khālid of Banū Ḥanm al-Jushamī,\(^{572}\) and over the Buṭūn was Si‘r b. Khufāf. Reinforcements from Banū Tamim used to come to Thumāmah b. Uthāl,\(^{573}\) but when this situation arose among them, they returned to their tribes; but that put Thumāmah b. Uthāl at a disadvantage until ‘Ikrimah [b. Abi Jahl] came to him and stirred him up, so he did not do anything [before ‘Ikrimah arrived].\(^{574}\) Then while people in the country of Banū Tamim were in that [state], some of them having busied themselves with others so that [each] Muslim [among] them was face to face with those who played for time and waited [to see what would happen] and face to face with those who doubted, Sajāḥ bt. al-Ḥārith came upon them by surprise, having arrived from the \(^{569}\) Wellhausen [Skizzen, VI, 148] noted that al-Ribāb should probably be struck from the text here, as al-Ribāb consisted of Dabbah and ‘Abd Manāt, mentioned in the following sentence (see Emendanda); but all manuscripts seem to have the word. Perhaps we should assume that the original intent was “bi-l-Ribāb” and that the waw was missing before the name of ‘Abdallāh b. Ṣafwān, as it actually is in the Cairo edition; this would yield the translation, “Among al-Ribāb, ‘Abdallāh... was in charge of Dabbah...,” etc. For Bahdā, read, probably, Bahdalalāh; cf. note 556 above.

---

\(^{567}\) I.e., when Ṣafwān left to see Abū Bakr (cf. p. 85, above).

\(^{568}\) Traceable only in Ibn Ḥajar, Ḥṣāḥ, s.v., which adds no new information.

\(^{570}\) A Tamimi who came to the Prophet with his father, probably Ṣafwān b. Ṣafwān; cf. Ibn al-ʿAthir, Usd, III, 186 and note 317, above.

\(^{571}\) A delegate to the Prophet from his tribe, Banū Taym b. ‘Abd Manāt of al-Ribāb; cf. Ibn al-ʿAthir, Usd, III, 408–9.

\(^{572}\) Jusham b. Awf was a clan of ʿAṣdh/Tamim; cf. Caskel, I, Table 77 and II, 268.

\(^{573}\) Of the Hanifah tribe of eastern Arabia, he was captured by the Muslims; later he embraced Islam and was pardoned. He then seems to have been involved in cutting off Mecca’s supply of grain from eastern Arabia on behalf of the Prophet. Cf. Ibn al-ʿAthir, Usd, I, 246–48; F. M. Donner, “Mecca’s Food Supplies and Muhammad’s Boycott,” 262.

\(^{574}\) Cf. p. 53, above on ‘Ikrimah being sent against Musaylimah.
Jazirah. She and her clan had been among Banū Taghlib.\textsuperscript{575} She was leading splinter groups of Rabi’ah, among them al-Hudhayl b. ‘Imrān\textsuperscript{576} at the head of Banū Taghlib and ‘Aqqah b. Hilāl at the head of al-Namīr\textsuperscript{577} and Wattād b. Fūlān\textsuperscript{578} at the head of Iyād\textsuperscript{579} and al-Salīl b. Qays at the head of Banū Shaybān.\textsuperscript{580} So a grave matter faced them, more serious than what the people were [already] involved in, because of Sajāh’s attack upon them and because of their disagreements and squabbles over what divided them. About this ‘Afīf b. al-Mundhir\textsuperscript{581} said:

Did he not come to you by night with the news of that which the chiefs of Banū Tamim encountered?

From their chiefs men called on each other, and they were among the noblest and best.

They forced them out, after they had had [their own] territory, into empty quarters and retreat.\textsuperscript{582}

Sajāh bt. al-Ḥarīth b. Suwayd b. ‘Uqfān and the offspring of her father ‘Uqfān were among the Banū Taghlib. Then, after the death of the Apostle of God she pretended to be a prophetess in the Jazirah among the Banū Taghlib, whereupon al-Hudhayl complied with her and left Christianity, and [also complied] \textsuperscript{575} A major tribe of the Rabi’ah group, living between eastern Arabia northward into southern Iraq and the Euphrates fringes. Cf. Caskel, II, 27–28 and 541–42.

\textsuperscript{576} I have not been able to trace further any of these three leaders of Rabi’ah—al-Hudhayl, ‘Aqqah, and Wattād.

\textsuperscript{577} Al-Namīr b. Qāṣīṭ was a minor tribe of Rabi’ah, closely affiliated with Taghlib. Cf. Caskel, II, 444.

\textsuperscript{578} Nuwayrī, 76: Ziyād b. Fūlān.

\textsuperscript{580} Bishr “al-Salīl” b. Qays was brother of the more famous Bistām, chief of the Hammām b. Murrah clan of Shaybān. Shaybān was the most powerful tribe of the Bakır b. Wā’il federation [part of Rabi’ah], occupying the lower Euphrates steppe region. Cf. Caskel, II, 507 and 524; F. M. Donner, “The Bakır b. Wā’il Tribes . . . ,” 22ff. Cf. pp. 90–91, below, where “Aqqah is called maternal uncle of Bishr.

\textsuperscript{582} Because of the requirements of rhyme, the poem has khīm for khaym, “retreat, withdrawal.”
with those chiefs who advanced with her to raid Abū Bakr. When she got as far as al-Ḥazn,\textsuperscript{583} she sent letters to Mālik b. Nuwayrāh and called him to an alliance; whereupon he answered her, turned her back from her raiding, and incited her against clans of Banū Tamīm. She said, "Yes, so pursue your business with whomever you think [right], for I am only a woman from Banū Yarbū', so if there is to be [any] sovereignty, it shall be yours."\textsuperscript{584} Then she sent to Banū Mālik b. Ḥanzalālah inviting them to an alliance; whereupon `Uṯārid b. Ḥajīb\textsuperscript{585} and the chiefs of Banū Mālik went out as fugitives until they came as guests among the Banū al-`Anbar,\textsuperscript{586} [staying] with Sabrah b. `Amr. They had disliked what Wākī' [b. Mālik] had done, and those like them of Banū Yarbū', having disliked what Mālik [b. Nuwayrāh] had done, went out until they came as guests to al-Ḥuṣayn b. Niyār among the Banū Māzin.\textsuperscript{587} Then when her messengers came to the Banū Mālik demanding alliance, Wākī' agreed to that; so Wākī' and Mālik and Sajāh joined, having made an alliance one with another, and agreed to fight the people. They said, "With whom should we begin? With Khaddām or Bahdā\textsuperscript{588} or with `Awf and the Abnā' or with al-Ribāb?" They held back from Qays [b. `Aṣim] because of what they saw of his indecision, hoping earnestly for him.\textsuperscript{589} Then she said, "Prepare your mounts, and get ready for booty, then raid al-Ribāb, for there is no veil before them."\textsuperscript{590} Sajāh headed for the wells\textsuperscript{591} until she encamped there and said to them, "The Dahna'\textsuperscript{592} is the barrier of Banū Tamīm, and when \textsuperscript{583.} A high plateau in northeastern Arabia, near the fringes of Iraq. Cf. Yāqūt, s.v. and Thīlo, s.v.

\textsuperscript{584.} Both Mālik and Sajāh were originally from Yarbū'.
\textsuperscript{585.} Of the Dārīm clan of Tamīm, led a delegation or Dārīm to the Prophet [Caskel, II, 580].
\textsuperscript{586.} `Anbar b. Yarbū' was Sajāh's clan of Tamīm [Caskel, II, 189].
\textsuperscript{588.} Probably Bahdalah; cf. note 556, above.
\textsuperscript{589.} I.e., hoping that he would join their cause.
\textsuperscript{590.} Sajāh's statement is couched in rhymed prose.
\textsuperscript{591.} Or "for al-Āhlar"; Yāqūt mentions a place with this name, but gives no precise location.
\textsuperscript{592.} An extensive tract of waterless sand desert in the Najd; at the time of the casualties press them, al-Ribab will not delay in taking refuge in al-Dajani and sand deserts (al-dahani); so let some of you encamp there. At this, “al-Jaful,” that is, Malik b. Nuwayrah, headed for al-Dajani and encamped in it. Al-Ribab heard of this, so they gathered to it, [both] their Dabbah and ‘Abd Manât [clans]. Now Waki’ and Bishr were responsible for [battling] Banû Bakr of Banû Dabbah, and ‘Aqqah was responsible for [fighting] the Tha’labah b. Sa’d b. Dabbah, and al-Hudhayl [b. ‘Imrân] was responsible [for fighting] the ‘Abd Manât; so Waki’ and Bishr met Banû Bakr of Banû Dabbah [in battle], whereupon the two were routed, and Samâ’a and Waki’ and Qa’qa were taken prisoner, and many were killed. So Qays b. ‘Âshim said regarding that [event]—that being the first that there appeared in him any remorse:

It is as if you never witnessed Samâ’a when he raided and Qa’qa did not rejoice, while Waki’ was thwarted. I saw that you had accompanied Dabbah unwillingly, [as though] having a painful scab on both sides, The releaser of prisoners whose march was foolish.

All of their business is on the rocks.

Then Sajah and al-Hudhayl and ‘Aqqah let Banû Bakr go because of the alliance between her and Waki’; ‘Aqqah [more-Banū Tamīm and the Affair of Sajāh bt. al-Ḥārith 91 over] was the maternal uncle of Bishr. [Sajāh] said, “Kill al-Ribāb and they will make a treaty with you and release your prisoners. You should carry to them their blood prices, and the others will praise the consequence of their decision.” So Ḍabbah released the prisoners to them and paid the blood price for the slain, and they went out from them. Then Qays recited [verses] about that, reproaching them for the truce of Ḍabbah, and supporting Ḍabbah and reproving600 them. No one of ‘Amr or Sa’d or al-Ribāb had joined the affair of Sajāh; from all of these [clans], they yearned only [to be aligned with] Qays, until he showed support for Ḍabbah and began to show regret. No one from Ḥanẓalah aided them except Waki’ and Mālik, and their assistance was an alliance on [condition] that they help one another and gather together to one another. About this Aṣamm al-Taymi601 said:

A sister of Taghlib came to us and then considered weak602 the armies603 from among the nobles of our ancestor’s tribe.
And she planted a call [to join her] firmly among us, out of stupidity,
although she was one from the great foreign tribes.604
We did not accept from them even what an ant could carry in its mouth,605
nor would she embrace [Islam] if she came to us.
May your sound judgment be folly and error
the evening you gathered troops together for her!

Then Sajāh went out heading the armies of the Jazīrah until she reached al-Nibāj, whereupon Aws b. Khuzaymah al-Hujaymī606

600. Reading ta’niban with the Cairo edition and [possibly] the Berlin manuscript, instead of the text’s ta’binan and other manuscript variants.
“Supporting” here is is’ād, lit., “rendering happy.” The verses are omitted from the text.

601. The poet Aṣamm b. Wallād b. Khuzaymah, of Taym al-Ribāb; cf. Caskel, II, 201.

602. Istahadda; possibly “threatened,” as proposed by Glossary.

603. Possibly “flocks.” Arabic jalā’īb.

604. ‘Āmār ‘ākhriñā, lit., “great tribes of [people] other than us.”

605. I.e., we accepted nothing from them.

606. I have not been able to trace him further. Hujaym was a clan of the B.
‘Amr/Tamīm; cf. Caskel, I, Table 84 and II, 286.
launched a raid against them leading those who crowded to him from Banū 'Amr, so that al-Hudhayl was taken captive by a nomad of Banū Mazin\textsuperscript{607} named Nāshirah. 'Aqqah was taken prisoner by 'Ubdah al-Hujaymī. They stopped fighting on condition that they return the prisoners to one another and that they turn back from them and not pass against the[ir will],\textsuperscript{608} so they did that. So they repulsed her and bound her and the two of them to an agreement that they withdraw from them and that they would not cross the[ir territory] except with their permission.\textsuperscript{609} Then they fulfilled [their promises] to them, but it continued [to burn] in the soul of al-Hudhayl against the Māzinī until, when 'Uthmān b. 'Affān was killed, he gathered a troop and launched a raid against Safār\textsuperscript{610} while Banū Māzin was there; so Banū Māzin killed him and shot him at Safār.\textsuperscript{611}

When\textsuperscript{612} al-Hudhayl and 'Aqqah returned to (Sajāh) and the chiefs of the people of the Jazirah had gathered, they said to her, "What do you order us [to do] now that Malik and Waki' have bound their two tribes to treaties so that they will not help us and will let us do no more than cross their territory, and [now that] we have made a treaty with this\textsuperscript{613} tribe?" So she replied, "Al-Yamāmah." At this they said, "The might of the people of al-Yamāmah is great, and the situation of Musaylimah has become rough." But she said, "Betake yourselves to al-Yamāmah, fly in with the flapping of the dove, for it is a gallant raid, no blame shall attach to you after it."\textsuperscript{614}

Then she rushed upon Banū Ḥanīfah. Musaylimah learned

\textsuperscript{607} Rajulun min Bani Māzin thumma min banī wabar. Although this construction is a common way of expressing a man's clan and subclan, I find no "Banū Wabar" among Māzin or anywhere else.

\textsuperscript{608} [An] lā yaitāzū 'alayhim, i.e., that they not pass through the territories of Aws against their will; cf. Ibn al-Athīr, II, 335: wa lā yati'u arda Awsin, "and not come to the land of Aws."

\textsuperscript{609} Lā yattakhidhū-hum tariqan illā min warā'ihim.

\textsuperscript{610} A watering place of Banū Māzin in the desert southeast of al-Baṣrāh (Yaqūt, s.v.).

\textsuperscript{611} We should perhaps read qatalathu for qatalathu: "Banū Māzin fought him..."

\textsuperscript{612} Cf. Nuwayri, 77–78 [to p. 93]; Caetani, 646–47.

\textsuperscript{613} Presumably meaning Banū Māzin.

\textsuperscript{614} Rhymed prose. of that and was afraid of her; he feared that, if he busied himself with her, Thumāmah would get the better of him in Ḥajr, or Shurāḥbīl b. Ḥasanah or the tribes that were around them. So he sent gifts to her, and then wrote to her requesting her pledge of security for his life so that he could come to her. At this she made the armies encamp at the wells, granting him permission and offering him security, so he came to her as a delegation at the head of forty people of Banū Ḥanifah. Now she was knowledgeable about Christianity, having learned from the knowledge of the Christians of Taghlib, so Musaylimah said, "Half of the earth is to us, and half would be to Quraysh if they had acted rightly; but God has returned to you the half which Quraysh rejected, and has given it to you, even though it would have been to (Quraysh) had she accepted." (Sajāh) said, "The half is not returned except by those who incline,\(^{615}\) so carry the half to the cavalry you see as if they were dying of thirst.\(^{616}\) So Musaylimah said,\(^{617}\) "God listened to whomever He listened to, and made him yearn for good when he yearned, and His cause is still arranged in everything that delights him. Your Lord saw you and gave you life and preserved you from loneliness, and saved you and gave you life on the day of His religion; for us some prayers of the company of the pious, neither miserable nor licentious, staying up at night and fasting by day; indeed your Lord is great, the Lord of the clouds and the rain.\(^{618}\) And he said also, "When I saw their faces they were comely, and their complexions were clear, and their hands were soft; I said to them, 'You shall not come to women, nor drink wine, but you are the company of the pious fasting by day and costing a day.' So praise be to God! Verily life came to where you live; ascend to the King of heaven. [Even] if it\(^{619}\) were only a mustard seed, a witness would take care of it who would know what is [hidden] in the breasts; but most people in it [will meet]

---

\(^{615}\) Man Ḥanaf, a pun on the name of Banū Ḥanifah.
\(^{616}\) Reading, with Nuwayrī, 78 and Cairo, ka al-sahafi. Rhymed prose.
\(^{617}\) Cf. Ibn Ḥubays, 35, ll. 7ff.
\(^{618}\) Rhymed prose.
\(^{619}\) I.e., one's good (or bad?) deeds.
Among the laws that Musaylimah prescribed for them was that whoever produced a single son as progeny should not come to a woman unless that son should die; then he should [again] seek [to procreate] children until he produced [another] son, and then forbear [again]. So he had forbidden women to anyone who had a male child.

According to Abu Ja`far—authorities other than Sayf: When Sajah descended upon Musaylimah he locked the fortress in front of her, so Sajah asked him to come down. He replied, "Then put your companions away from you"; so she did that. Then Musaylimah said, "Erect a domed tent [qubbah] for her and perfume it, perhaps it will make her think of sex." So they did so; then when she entered the tent, Musaylimah came down and said, "May ten [men] stop here and ten stop there." Then he studied with her, saying, "What has been revealed to you?" But she replied, "Do women usually begin? Rather, you: what has been revealed to you?" He replied, "Do you not see how your Lord has done with the pregnant woman, He has brought forth from her a soul that strives, from between the belly skin and the waist." She said, "What else?" He said, "It was revealed to me, 'Verily God created women as vulvas, and made men for them as husbands, so we insert into them fat cocks, then we withdraw them when we wish, so they may..."

620. Reading, with Mss. B and C and Cairo, wa-li-`akthar al-nāsi fihā al-thubūr, as do Emendanda.
621. Lit., "until."
623. Or, possibly, "perhaps she will mention marriage [al-būh]." Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 355: "he perfumed it so that the sweet scent would make her think of intercourse."
624. Diyarbakrī, II, 159, in a loose paraphrase has tadārasā al-nubuwwah, "the two of them studied prophecy together." Balansi, 62 and Ibn Hubaysih, 34, top, have Musaylimah say, ta`lī natadārasu al-nubuwwah ayyunā dhaqqu, "come, let us study which of us is more entitled to [claim] prophethood."
625. Diyarbakrī, II, 158: "Verily, God has bestowed grace on the pregnant woman."
626. Text has fu`s, not found in Ibn Manzūr. We follow Nuwayri and Cairo, which read qu`s, (pl. of aq`as), Cairo, citing Aghānī, glosses this as ghāramil, "coarse penises." Cf. Ibn Manzūr, VI, 177 [s.v. aq`as], "with chests protruding and backs in."
produce for us a kid." She said, "I bear witness that you are a prophet." He said, "Do you want me to marry you, so that I may devour the Arabs with my tribe and your tribe?" She replied that she did. [So] he said,

Why don't you go to fuck, as the bed has been prepared for you?
If you wish, in the house,
or, if you wish, in the closet.
If you wish we shall take you thrown on your back, or, if you wish, on [all] fours.
If you wish, with two-thirds of it, or, if you wish, with all of it.

She said, "No, rather with all of it." He said, "Revelations came to me about that." So she remained with him three days, and then returned to her tribe, whereupon they said, "What do you think?" She replied, "He was in the right, so I followed him and married him." They said, "And did he give you anything as a dowry?" She said that he had not, so they said, "Go back to him, for it is disgraceful for one like you to return without a dowry." So she returned to him, whereupon when Musaylimah saw her he locked the fortress and said, "What do you want?" She said, "Give me something as dowry." He replied, "Who is your muezzin?" She told him it was Shabath b. Rib`i al-Riyahi, so he said, "Bring him to me." So (Shabath) came, whereupon (Musaylimah) said, "Call out among your companions that Musaylimah b. Ḥabib, the Apostle of God, has unburdened you of two of the prayers that Muḥammad imposed upon you—the last evening prayer and the dawn prayer." Among her companions were al-Zibrīqān b. Badr and Ḥūṣain b. Ḥājib and the likes of them.

According to al-Kalbī—informants of Banū Tamīm: Most of Banū Tamīm in the sands did not pray the two [prayers]. Then she went back, and with her were her companions, among them

627. As always with Musaylimah's alleged revelations, rhymed prose.
628. Nuwayrī, 79: "conquer" or "humble" the Arabs.
629. Riyāḥ was another clan of Yarbū, Sājāh's subtribe of Tamīm.
al-Zibriqān b. Badr, 'Uṭārid b. Ḥājib, 'Amr b. al-Ahtam, Ghaylān b. Kharashāh, and Shabath b. Rib‘ī. So Ḥājib said,
Our prophetess entered the evening a female whom we visited, while the prophets of the people entered the morning as males.

And Ḥukaym b. ‘Ayyāsh “al-A’war” al-Kalbi said, rebuking Muḍar on account of Sajāb and mentioning Rabī‘ah.
They brought you a steadfast religion, and you brought verses copied in a knowing book.

Continuation of the Account of Sayf [1920]

(Musaylimah) made a treaty with [Sajāb] on condition that he deriver to her half of the revenues of al-Yamāmah; she refused[to accept] unless he delivered the [installment of the] first year in advance, so he conceded that to her. He said, “Leave behind someone who can collect the advance payment for you, and go back yourself with half of [this] year[‘s share].” Then he returned and carried to her the half, so she carried it off and returned to the Jazīrah, leaving al-Hudhayl and ‘Aqqah and Wattād so that the remaining half might be paid. Then they were taken

---

631. ‘Amr b. Sinān “al-Ahtam” [“the toothless”] was a poet and member of the Tamim delegation to the Prophet. He became a follower of Sajāb, but later embraced Islam. On him see EI², s.v. “Amr b. al-Ahtam” (A. J. Wensinck-Ch. Pellat); Caskel, II, 184.
635. Nutifu bi-hā; sometimes with prurient intent.
637. Muḍar and Rabī‘ah were the two main genealogical divisions of the “North Arabs,” portrayed as two sons of Nizar. The Kalbite (South Arab or Qahtānī) poet reproaches the North Arabs, who included Sajāb’s tribe of Tamim and her allies of Ribāb and Ḍabbah.
638. Cf. Nuwayrī, 80; Caetani, 648.
639. Text, Cairo, Nuwayrī, and Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, have Ziyād; see Emendanda and p. 88, note 578, above.
by surprise by Khālid b. al-Walid's approach to them, so they dispersed.

Sajāḥ remained among Banū Taghlib until Mu‘āwiya transferred them in his day, in the “year of union.”640 When the people of Iraq agreed [to recognize] Mu‘āwiya [as caliph] after ‘Ali, Mu‘āwiya took to expelling from al-Kūfah those who had been most vehement in the cause of ‘Ali, and to settle in their homes those people of Syria and al-Baṣrah and the Jazīrah who were most vehement in his own cause; it is they who were called the “transfers”641 in the garrison towns. So he expelled Qa‘qā’ b. ‘Amr b. Mālik642 from al-Kūfah to Iliyā643 in Palestine, and petitioned him to settle in the residences of his paternal relatives, Banū ‘Uqfān,644 and to transfer them645 to [the properties of] Banū Tamīm. So he transferred them from the Jazīrah to al-Kūfah and settled them in the residences of al-Qa‘qā’ and his relatives. [Sajāḥ] came with them and became a good Muslim.

Al-Zibrīqān and al-Aqrā646 went out to Abū Bakr and said, “Make over to us the khardj.647 of al-Bahrayn and we will guarantee for you that no one from our tribe will repudiate [İslām].” So (Abū Bakr) did that and wrote the document. The one who acted as middleman for them was Talbah b. ‘Ubaydallah. They called upon witnesses, among them ‘Umar; but when the document was brought to ‘Umar, he looked at it [1921]

640. ‘Ām al-jama‘ah: the year 40 AH/AD 660–661, so called because the Muslim community came together in recognizing Mu‘āwiya, ending the political division of the first civil war. Pace Caetani, 648; see Abū Zur‘ah al-Dimashqī, Ta’rikh, 188 [no. 101] and 190 [no. 105].
641. Al-nawāqīl.
642. Cf. notes 485 and 598, above.
643. I.e., Aelia Capitolina [Jerusalem].
645. Presumably Banū Taghlib.
646. Cf. Nuwayri, 80–81. Al-Aqrā’ b. Hābis, chief of Darīm clan of Tamīm, was the first Tamīmī to go to the Prophet, during the conquest of Mecca; he was put in charge of the ṣadaqah of Banū Ḥanẓalah. Cf. Elż, s.v. “Al-Aqrā’ b. Hābis” [M. J. Kister].
647. In classical juristic usage, kharāj is a kind of land tax, but such clear-cut systematization of terminology was not yet in force during the riddah wars; perhaps “tribute” is a better rendering. For a recent discussion of the development of tax terminology, see Simonsen, Studies.
without witnessing it. Then he said, "No, by God, absolutely not!" and tore up the document and erased it. Ṭalḥah became angry at this, so he went to Abū Bakr saying, "Are you the commander or is 'Umar?" Whereupon (Abū Bakr) replied, "'Umar is, except that obedience is owed to me." So he calmed down. The two of them witnessed with Khālid all the battles up to al-Yamāmah; then al-Aqrā' went to Dūmah with Shuraḥbil.

Al-Butāh and Its Story

According to al-Sarī b. Yahyā—Shu'ayb—Sayf—al-Ṣa'b b. Ṭāiyyah b. Bīlāl: When Sajāh returned to the Jazīrah, Malik b. Nuwayrah held back and repented and became perplexed over his situation. Waki' and Samā'ah knew the shamefulness of what they had done, so they returned to the fold and behaved humbly. The two of them extracted the sadāqah taxes and came out with it to meet Khalid; so Khalid said, "What caused you to make an alliance with these people?" Whereupon they replied, "Some blood vengeance we were in the course of pursuing among the Banī Dabbah; they were days of preoccupation and opportunities." About that Waki' said:

Do not reckon me a renegade, for indeed I was constrained when the fingers were being bent for me.

But I guarded the bulk of Malik and watched until my eyes gave out on me.

So when Khālid came to us with his battle standard the payments reached him first at Butāh.

---

648. Or, perhaps, "even al-Yamāmah."
650. Cf. p. 90, above.
651. Lit., "returned a good returning and were not haughty," reading wa-lam yatahāyarā with text. Emendanda proposes lam yatahāyarā, "they were not perplexed."
652. I.e., even as I was being counted among the renegades (by the bending of fingers as a way of counting), I was being held back by others from declaring my allegiance to Islam.
653. Lit., "until the ocular veins grew dark on me."
654. I.e., payment of sadāqah reached Khālid at Butāh before the people who paid it themselves arrived? (takhaṭṭat ilayhi).
In the country of Banū Ḥanḍalah the only hateful situation that remained was that of Malik b. Nuwayrah and those who surrounded him at al-Butāh. He was perplexed and worried.

According to al-Sarī—Shu′ayb—Sayf—Sahl—al-Qāsim and 'Amr b. Shu′ayb:655 When Khalid wanted to march, he left Zafar mopping up Asad, Ghaṭafān, Ṭayyi', and Hawāzin; so he marched heading for al-Butāh this side of al-Ḥazn, while Malik b. Nuwayrah was there. His situation became doubtful to him, and the Anṣār hesitated [to join] Khalid and held back from him saying, "These were not the caliph's orders to us; the caliph charged us to stand fast until he wrote to us after we had finished with al-Buzāḳah and mopped up [opposition in] the people’s territory." Whereupon Khalid said, "He did not charge you with this; rather, he charged me to proceed, and I am the commander and the one to whom communications come. Even if there reached me no letter nor any command of his, I would seize any opportunity that I perceived before informing him of it, if I thought that by informing him the opportunity would slip away from me.657 Likewise, if we were tempted by some situation about which we had no instructions from him, we would not fail to consider what was the most desirable option before us and then to act on it. Now this Malik b. Nuwayrah is right opposite us and I am heading for him with those who are with me of the Muhājirūn and those who follow in good works; I shall not force you." Khalid proceeded and the Anṣār repented and urged one another on, saying, "If the group achieves good [results], it is a good you will be excluded from; and if some misfortune befalls them, the people will shun you for it." So they agreed to join with Khalid, and dispatched messengers to 655. Cf. partial parallel in Diyarbakri, II, 209 top; Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 357–58; Balansi, 50–51; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 28 [from Wāqidil]; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 28 [from Ibn Isḥāq]; Nuwayri, 82–83; Iṣfahānī, XIV, 66–67; Caetani, 650.

---

656. Here and below, istabra‘a + direct object. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 58 [<Ibn Isḥāq>].

657. I.e., by causing delay while waiting for the caliph's reply. The syntax is problematic; see the discussion of the sentence in J. Bellamy, "Arabic Yerses from the First/Second Century: The Inscription of 'En 'Avdat," Journal of Semitic Studies 35 (1990), 76, note 6, with other references and translations.
him, whereupon he waited for them until they joined him. Then he marched until he reached al-Butāh, but found no one there.

According to Abū Ja‘far—al-Sarī b. Yahyā—Shu‘ayb b. Ibrāhīm—Sayf b. 'Umar—Khuzaymah b. Shajarah al-'Uqfānī—'Uthmān b. Suwayd—Suwayd b. al-Math‘abah al-Riyāhī:658 Khālid b. al-Walid arrived in al-Butāh, whereupon he found no one there; he found that Mālik had dispersed them among their flocks659 and forbidden them to gather when he became perplexed over his situation. [In doing so] he said, “Oh Banū Yarbū`, we have disobeyed our commanders, inasmuch as they called us to this religion, whereas the people held us back from it, so that we have neither prospered nor succeeded. I have reconsidered this situation and found it feasible for them without any managing (siyāsah). For lo, the situation is one that the people do not manage. Beware of acting in a hostile manner against a group having a mandate [from God to exercise authority],660 so disperse to your territories and enter into this cause.” So they dispersed accordingly to their flocks,661 and Mālik went out until he returned to his residence. When Khālid reached al-Butāh, he scattered portions of the army and ordered them to summon [the people] to Islām, and to bring to it whoever had not [yet] responded; and if he resisted, to kill him. [This] was part of that with which Abū Bakr had charged him:662 “When you encamp someplace, make the call to prayer and the iqāmah.663 Then, if the people make the call to prayer and the iqāmah, leave them alone; but if they do not do so, there is no [course] but to raid them. [In that case] kill them by every means, by fire or whatever else. And if they respond to you in the call to Islām, then question them [further]; if they affirm [payment of] the alms tax

---

659. Here and below, amwdl, lit., “properties.” It can refer to flocks or to real property.
660. Qawmun suni'a lahum.
661. Or, perhaps, “properties, lands” (amwdl).
663. The iqāmah is the second call to prayer, not broadcast publicly to notify people at large, but made to the faithful gathered in the mosque to indicate that prayer is about to begin.
then accept that from them; but if they deny it, then there is no [course] but to raid them without any word [of warning]."

Then the cavalry brought Mālik b. Nuwayrah to [Khalid], along with some people of Banū Tha'labah b. Yarbū', of 'Āsim and 'Ubayd and 'Arīn and Ja'far. The raiding party disagreed about them; among them was Abū Qatādah, who was one of those who testified that they had made the call to prayer and the iqāmah and had performed the prayer. So when they disagreed about them, [Khalid] ordered that they be locked up, on a cold night against which nothing was sufficient [for warmth]. [The night] began to get colder, so Khalid ordered a crier to call out, "Keep your captives warm." Now in the Kinānah dialect, when one says, "addī'ū al-rajlul," it means "keep him warm" or "wrap him up," but in the dialects of others it means 'kill him.' So the people thought, since [the word] meant 'kill' in their dialect, that he wanted them killed, so they did so; Dirār b. al-Azwar killed Mālik. Khalid heard the outcry, so he went out after they had finished with them; whereupon he said, "If God desires something, He effects it."

The people disagreed about them. Abu Qatadah said [to Khalid], "This is your doing." At this Khalid countered him with rough speech, whereupon (Abu Qatadah) became angry and proceeded to Abū Bakr. At this Abū Bakr became angry at (Abu Qatadah) until 'Umar spoke to him on his behalf, but (Abu Bakr) would only be content if (Abu Qatadah) returned to (Khalid); so [Abu Qatadah] returned to [Khalid], so that he came to Medina with him.

Khalid married Umm Tamim bt. al-Minhāl, and abstained

---

665. Subclans of Tha’labah b. Yarbū’ of Tamīm; cf. Caskel, I, Table 69. Banū ‘Ubayd genealogically included ʿĀsim; perhaps ‘Ubayd here is used to refer to all clans other than ʿĀsim.
666. Evidently the crier was a Kināni. The text is confused here, although the meaning is clear. See Glossary; Emendanda; Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, s.v. dafa’a; Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149; Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 358.
667. I.e., about whether their deaths were reprehensible.
668. Or, perhaps, "pelted him with stones" [zabara-hu].
from her so that the period between her menstruations should elapse.\textsuperscript{670} Now the Arabs used to find [the taking of] women abhorrent in war, and condemn it. ‘Umar said to Abū Bakr, “In the sword of Khalid there really is forbidden behavior; and even if this [story about Mālik’s execution] were not true, it is necessary for you to take retaliation on him.” He pestered him about that, but Abū Bakr did not take retaliation on [any of] his tax agents or commanders.\textsuperscript{671} Then he said, “Tell me, ‘Umar, [Khalid] sought to clear something up but [in the process] made a mistake;\textsuperscript{672} so stop berating him. [Abū Bakr] paid the blood price for Mālik and wrote to Khalid to come before him; so he did that to explain his story, whereupon [Abū Bakr] pardoned him and accepted [his explanation]. But [Abū Bakr] did censure him over [his] marriage to\textsuperscript{673} one whom the Arabs considered it disgraceful [to marry] in that way.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Hishām b. ‘Urwah—his father: \textsuperscript{674} A group from the raiding party testified that they [themselves] had made the call to prayer and done the \textit{iqāmah} and prayed, whereupon [the people being raided] had done likewise; whereas others testified that nothing like that had occurred, so that [those raided] were killed. [Mālik’s] brother,\textsuperscript{675} Mutammīm b. Nuwayrah, came begging Abū Bakr for [permission to seek vengeance for] his blood and requesting him to make [the guilty parties] captive; but he wrote to him rejecting [their] capture. ‘Umar pressed him to dismiss Khalid, saying, “In his sword there really is forbidden behavior,” whereupon he replied, “Oh ‘Umar, I will not sheathe a sword that God has drawn against the unbelievers.”

\textsuperscript{670} The idea being to wait until after she had menstruated before consummating the new marriage, thus removing any doubt about the paternity of eventual children; an allusion to the ‘\textit{i\text{"i}ddah} or “waiting period” enjoined by Islamic law. Cf. \textit{Egyptian Proverbs}, s.v. “‘Idda” [Y. Linant de Bellefonds].

\textsuperscript{671} \textit{ta\\text{"a}wuala fa\\text{"a}khta\\text{"a}}. Cf. Balansi, 54, Ibn Hubaysh, 29: \textit{ka\text{"a}na Khalidun ta\\text{"a}wuala amran fa\\text{"a}khta\\text{"a}-hu}. Hoenerbach translates “er hat eine Erklärung gesucht und sich dabei geirrt.” [Wathimah, 12/53].

\textsuperscript{672} Cf. Hoeschen, \textit{Skezzen}, VI, 149; \textit{Emendanda}.

\textsuperscript{673} Cf. Wellhausen, \textit{Skizzen}, VI, 149; \textit{Emendanda}.

\textsuperscript{674} Cf. Diyarbakrī, II, 209; Isfahānī, XIV, 67–68; Caetani, 655.

\textsuperscript{675} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, II, 359, different story.
According to al-Sarı—Shu’ayb—Sayf—Khuzaymah—’Uthmān—Suwayd:676 Mālik b. Nuwayrah was one of the hairiest of people. Now the men of the army used the heads [of the slain captives] to hold up their cooking-pots, and there was no head among them whose skin the fire did not reach except Mālik’s; the pot became well-cooked but his head did not cook because of the amount of hair on it, the hair preventing [the fire’s] heat from reaching the skin. Mutammim described him in verse, mentioning his slenderness.677 ‘Umar had seen him when he came to the Prophet, so he said, “Was he really like that, Oh Mutammim?” He replied, “As for what I said, yes.”

According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Muḥammad b. Ishāq—Ṭalḥah b. ‘Abdallāh b. ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. ʿAbd Bakr al-Ṣiddiq:678 Among Abū Bakr’s instructions to his armies was [this]: ‘When you come upon one of the peoples’ abodes, and then hear the call to prayer in it, desist from its people until you have asked them for what reason they were hostile. But if you do not hear the call to prayer, then launch a raid such that you kill and burn.”679 Among those who testified that Mālik [b. Nuwayrah] had embraced Islam was Abu Qatadah al-Harith b. Rib‘ī, a brother of Banu Salimah. He made a vow to God that he would never witness a war with Khalid b. al-Walid after that. He used to relate that when they came upon a group they would watch them under cover of night so that the group took up arms. “Then680 we would say, ‘We are Muslims,’ ‘whereupon they would say, ‘We too are Muslims.’ [So] we would say, ‘Then what is the meaning of your weapons?’ They would say, ‘And what is the meaning of your weapons?’ whereupon we would say, ‘If you are as you say, then put your weapons down.’ So they would put them down; then we would pray and they would pray.”
Khālid used to excuse himself for killing [Mālik] [on the grounds] that [Mālik] had said, when he was interrogating him, "I think your companion was only saying such and such." [Khālid] said, "And why didn’t you reckon him a companion of yours?" Then he made him come forward and struck off his head and those of his companions. Then, when 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb learned of their murder, he spoke of it with Abū Bakr repeatedly, saying, "The enemy of God transgressed against a Muslim man, killing him and then leaping upon his wife." Khālid b. al-Walid approached [Medina] on his return until he entered the mosque, wearing a robe of his on which was iron rust, and with his head wrapped in a turban of his in which arrows had become planted. So when he entered the mosque, 'Umar went to him and pulled the arrows from his head and smashed them. Then he said, "What hypocrisy, to kill a Muslim man and then leap upon his wife! By God, I would pelt you with stones." Khālid b. al-Walid did not speak to him, and thought that Abu Bakr would only have the same opinion about him as 'Umar, until he entered upon Abu Bakr. When he entered upon him, he told him the story and Abū Bakr pardoned him and forgave him without punishment for whatever had happened in his recent campaign. So Khālid went out when Abū Bakr favored him. 'Umar was seated in the mosque, so he said, "Come to me, you son of the world!" From this, 'Umar knew that Abu Bakr had favored him, so he did not speak to him and went into his house.

The one who killed Mālik b. Nuwayrah was 'Abd b. al-Azwar al-Asadi. According to Ibn al-Kalbi, the one who killed Mālik b. Nuwayrah was Dirār b. al-Azwar.

681. Le., the Prophet, as a gloss in Isfahānī, XIV, 68 makes clear.
683. The punishment for adultery in classical Islamic law. See Joseph Schacht, Introduction to Islamic Law, 15–16.
684. Or: "one with the cloak": b. umm Shamlah. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 359 has "b. Umm Salamah."
685. According to Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, III, 334, same as Dirār b. al-Azwar; according to Ibn Hājar, Isdabah, s.v., Dirār’s brother.
Musaylimah the Liar and His Tribe

Remainder of the Story of Musaylimah the Liar and His Tribe of the People of al-Yamāmah

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad:687 When Abū Bakr sent 'Ikrimah b. Abi Jahl against Musaylimah and sent Shurabbil after him, 'Ikrimah made haste and strove to precede Shurabbil so that he might secure [for himself] the fame [of having made war.]688 He attacked [Musaylimah’s followers], whereupon they defeated him. Shurabbil remained on the road where689 the news reached him. 'Ikrimah wrote to Abū Bakr about his situation, so Abū Bakr wrote to him, “Oh Ibn Umm 'Ikrimah, let me not see you, nor should you see me in this situation; nor should you turn back, thereby weakening the army. Forge ahead so that you assist Ḥudhayfah and 'Arfajah, fighting along with them the people of 'Uman and Mahrah. And if the two of them are occupied, proceed yourself; then march with your army mopping up those whom you pass until you meet al-Muhājir b. Abī Umayyah in the Yemen and Ḥaḍramawt.” And [Abū Bakr] wrote to Shurabbil ordering him to stay put until his [further] order should reach him. Then he wrote to him several days before directing Khālid to al-Yamāmah: “When Khālid reaches you, then you will be unoccupied if God wills, so betake yourself to Qudā‘ah so that you and 'Amr b. al-‘Āṣ may be against those of them who have denied and resisted [Islam].” So when Khālid arrived before Abū Bakr from al-Butāh, Abū Bakr was pleased with Khalid, listened to his excuse, and accepted [it] from him, and believed him and was pleased with him and directed him against Musaylimah. The army went campaigning with him; Thābit b. Qays690 and al-Barā’ b. Fulān691 led the Anṣār, Abū Ḥudhayfah692 and Zayd693... led the Muhājirūn, and leading the tribes was a man over each tribe. Khālid hurried to reach the men of the army at al-Butāh, and awaited the levy that was being raised in Medina; then, when it reached him, he went forth until he came to al-Yamāmah. Banū Hanifāh were at that time numerous.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Abū ‘Amr b. al-‘Alā’—a man. The number of Banū Ḥanifah in those days were 40,000 fighting men in their villages and adjacent tracts. So Khālid marched until, when he drew near them, he made some cavalry bear down on Ḍaqqah and al-Hudhayl and Wattād, who had stayed [behind to take care of] the tribute that Musaylimah had given out to them so that they might take it to Sajāh. He [also] wrote to the tribes of Tamīm about [‘Aqqah, al-Hudhayl and Wattād], so that (the Tamīmīs) drove them away and expelled them from the Arabian peninsula. Shurāḥbīl b. Hasanah hurried and did what ‘Ikrimah had done; he tried to precede Khālid by fighting Musaylimah before Khālid could reach him; but he was struck by disaster, so he refrained from fighting. So when Khālid reached him he reproached him. Khālid only relied on those cavalry out of fear that (the enemy) would come upon him from behind while they were on the outskirts of al-Yamāmah.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—‘Abdallāh b. Sa‘īd b. Thābit—someone who informed him—Jābir b. Fulān. Abū Bakr reinforced Khālid with Salīt, so that he would support him against anyone who might come upon him from behind. So [Salīt] went out; then, when he drew near Khālid, he found those cavalry who had gone repeatedly to that country had scattered and fled. So he stayed close to them, as reinforcement. Abū Bakr used to say, “I do not appoint the people of Badr; rather I 695. Reading thus instead of Ziyād in the text, as Emendanda: cf. p. 88.

699. Lā asta‘milu.
700. One wonders if the text here originally read “nomads” (ahl al-wabar); cf. Donner, Early Islamic Conquests, 264 and note 44.
leave them to meet God with the best of their works. For truly God delivers more and better [things] through them and through the upright among the nations (umam) than He achieves victory through them.’ [But in his caliphate] `Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb used to say, ‘By God, I make them [truly] partners; and may I be imitated [in doing this].’

According to al-Sarī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—Talḥah b. al-A’lam—`Ubayd b. `Umayr—Uthāl al-Ḥanafi, who was with Thumāmah b. Uthāl: Musaylimah used to treat everyone gently and be amicable with him, and it did not occur to the people to know evil from him. With him was Nahār “al-Rajjāl” b. `Unfuwah,701 he had emigrated to the Prophet, recited the Qurān, and become knowledgeable in religion; so (the Prophet) had sent him as a teacher to the people of al-Yamāmah, and to stir up discord against Musaylimah and strengthen the situation of the Muslims. He was more [a cause of] sedition among the Banū Ḥanīfah than was Musaylimah; he swore to (Musaylimah) that he had heard Muhammad say that he was made a partner with him. Consequently [people] believed (Musaylimah) and responded to [his call]. They ordered him to write to the Prophet, and promised that they would support him against (the Prophet) if (the latter) did not accept. Now, Nahār al-Rajjāl b. `Unfuwah would not say anything, but only followed him in it, and ending up [doing what he suggested]. [Among Muslims] the call to prayer used to be made [in the name of] the Prophet, and it was declared in the call to prayer that Muhammad was the Apostle of God. The one who used to make the call to prayer for (Musaylimah) was Abdallah b. al-Nawwāḥah, and the one who used to make the iqāmah for him was Ḥujayr b. `Umayr,703 who [also] made the declaration [of prophethood] to him. [But] when Ḥujayr was about to make the declaration, Musaylimah would.

---

701. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 361; Nuwayrī, 85–86; Caetani, 639. The name is uncertain; cf. p. 117, below, “al-Rahhāl.” Diyarbakrī, II, 189 and 211 has “al-Dajjāl.” Balansi, 58–59 and Ibn Hubaysh, 30 bottom have “al-Rajjāl”; but Ibn Hubaysh, 63 bottom, suggests that there were two brothers, named al-Rajjāl and al-Rahhāl or al-Dajjāl, both killed at al-Yamāmah.

702. Fitnah.

say, "Speak clearly, Ḥujayr!" So he would raise his voice and exert himself in declaring himself and Nahār veracious, and in imputing error to those who had embraced Islām. 704 His dignity made a great impression upon them.

(Musaylimah)705 erected a sacred enclave in al-Yamāmah, restricting it and imposing it upon the people so that it was respected. Now there were situated within that sacred enclave the villages of the Aḥalif706—sections of Banū Usayyid707 whose abode was in al-Yamāmah, so the place of their abode came to be in the sacred area. (The Aḥalif are Sayhān, Numārah, Nimr, and al-Ḥārith, sons of Jurwah.)708 So if (the Yamāmans) had abundant fruits, (Banū Usayyid) raided the orchards709 of the people of al-Yamāmah and defiled the sacred enclave. If (the Yamāmans) got wind that they had entered (the sacred enclave), they withdrew from (Usayyid) in fear; but if they were not aware of them, that was what (Usayyid) wanted.710 That happened (to the Yamāmans) frequently, until they asked (Musaylimah) for help against them. At this (Musaylimah) said, "I am expecting something to come to me from heaven about you and them." Then he said, "By the darkest night, by the blackest wolf, by the mountain goat, Usayyid has not defiled a sacred thing."711 So they replied, "Is it not forbidden to desecrate the holy enclave

---

704. The text about the calls to prayer is difficult, either we must assume several unmarked changes of subject, or assume that the sentence relates to Nahār's and Ḥujayr's change of sides. The former assumption has been adopted here. Cf. the version of the story in Ibn Ḥubaysh, 34 bottom and 35 middle: Ḥujayr would say the call to prayer in Muhammad's name, and then say "Musaylimah is..." and stop. So one of Musaylimah's followers would say, "Speak clearly, Ḥujayr!" Whereupon he would say, "Musaylimah is the Apostle of God." Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, condenses Tabāri's version, but also attempts to show Ḥujayr vacillating in his call to prayer.

706. Or "confederates."

707. A section of Banū 'Amr b. Tamīm.

709. Thimār, lit., "the fruits."

710. I.e., they could raid the oasis undisturbed.

711. Rhymed prose.
and to ruin property?" Then (Usayyid) went back to raiding and (the Yamâmâns) went back to complaining, so he said, "I am expecting something [more] to come to me." Then he said, "By the obscure night, by the restless wolf, Usayyid never cut anything, neither succulent nor dry." At this they replied, "Aren't date palms succulent? Yet they cut them off; aren't garden walls dry? Yet they tore them down." So he said (to the Yamâmâns), "Go! Return, for you have no claim." Among the things that he recited to them about (Usayyid) was: "Banû Tamim is a tribe of purity, an independent tribe with nothing reprehensible about them and [who pay] no tribute [to anyone]; let us be allies of protection with them in goodness as long as we live, let us protect them from every person, then when we die their fate will be to the Merciful One [al-Rahmân]." And he [also] used to say, "By the goats, by their kinds, by the most remarkable of them—the black ones and their milk, by the black goat, by the white milk, indeed it is the wonder of pure milk, adulterating milk has been forbidden, so what you have, do not mix milk with dates." And he used to say, "Oh frog, daughter of a frog, croak what you croak, your upper part is in the water and your lower part in the mud, do not bar any person drinking, nor make the water turbid." And he used to say, "By the women who scatter seed at planting, by the women reaping at harvest, by the women who winnow wheat, by the women who grind flour, by the women who break bread, by the women who break bread into crumbs, by the women who gobble mouth-fuls of grease and fat, you have been favored over the people of the hair [tents], nor shall the settled people take pre-

---

712. Rhymed prose. Nuwayrî, 87 offers "powerful wolf" as a gloss.
713. Authors wishing to ridicule Musaylimah are fond of quoting this passage from his alleged revelations; cf. p. 133, below; Diyarbakıri, II, 158, 210 bottom; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 32, 34, 61; Ibn at-Athir, Kāmil, II, 361–62; Balansi, 117–18; Nuwayrî, 87.
714. Here and subsequently the verbs and pronouns are masculine plural; i.e., the passage is addressed to Musaylimah's followers in general, not to women in particular.
715. I.e., over the nomads; ahl al-wabar.
716. Ahd al-madar.
cedence over you, defend your cultivated land, shelter the one seeking favor, and oppose the oppressor."

There came to (Musaylimah) a woman of Banū Ḥanīfah called Umm al-Haytham, saying, "Our date palms are tall and our wells are dried up; so pray to God for our water and our palms as Muhammad prayed for the people of Hazmān." Whereupon (Musaylimah) said, "Oh Nahār, what is she talking about?" So (Nahār) explained, "The people of Hazmān came to Muhammad complaining of how far away their water was; and their wells were dried up and their palms very tall. So he prayed for them, so that their wells overflowed and every date palm that was expired leaned over so that its branches, that is its top, touched the ground so that it struck roots; then it was cut from below, so that it once again had blooming palm shoots growing upward." (Musaylimah) said, "And what did he do with the wells?" (Nahār) replied, "He called for a bucket full of water and then prayed for them into it. Then he rinsed with a mouthful of it and spat it into it, whereupon they took it away to empty it into those wells; then they watered their palms with it, doing with the aged [palm] what I described to you, whereas the other [palms] remained [as they were] until they aged." So Musaylimah called for a bucket of water and prayed for them into it. Then he rinsed with some of it and spat [it] into it, so they took it and poured it into their wells, whereupon the waters of those wells sank into the ground and their palms became barren, but that only became evident after his defeat.

Nahār said to (Musaylimah), "Ask blessings upon the newborns of Banū Ḥanīfah," at which he said to him, "What is 718. Perhaps "the adulterer": al-bāghī.

---

720. I.e., and therefore hard to harvest.
721. The sentence is awkward; cf. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149.
722. Aged palm = al-muntahā; i.e., it was bent over to the ground so that the top struck roots, etc.
723. Ilā intihā‘i-hi.
724. Cf. Dīyārbakrī, II, 158.
this ‘asking for blessings?’” [Nahār] replied, “Whenever a newborn was born among the people of the Hijāz, they used to bring him to Muḥammad, whereupon he would rub his palate with a date pit726 and anoint his head.” No child was brought to Musaylimah for such treatment, however, but that he would gnash the teeth and speak defectively; but that [only] became apparent after his defeat.

They said, “Search out their walled gardens, as Muḥammad used to do, to pray in them.” So he entered one of the gardens of al-Yamāmah and washed in it, whereupon Nahār said to the owner of the garden, “Why don’t you water your garden with the wash water of al-Rahmān until it was irrigated and drenched, just as Banū al-Mahriyyah, a family of Banū Ḥanīfah, did?” [Now a man of al-Mahriyyah had come to the Prophet, and taken his wash water and carried it with him to al-Yamāmah and poured it into his well. Then he drew it out and used it for irrigation. His land [formerly] used to be parched, but [thereafter] it was quenched and satisfied, so that you would find only tall greenery.) So [the owner] did so, whereupon [his land] became once again wasteland, [and] its pasture would not grow.727

A man came to (Musaylimah) saying, “Pray to God for my land, for it is saline, just as Muḥammad prayed for a man of Sulaym on behalf of his land.” At this (Musaylimah) asked, “What is he talking about, oh Nahār?” So (Nahār) said728 “A man of Sulaym whose land exuded salty water came to (Muḥammad), so he prayed for him and gave him a bucket of water and spat into it for him; whereupon he poured it out into his well. Then he drew some, and it had become sweet and good.” So (Musaylimah) did the same, whereupon the man left and did with the bucket just as the man of Sulaym had done; but his land drowned, its moisture did not dry up, and its fruit did not ripen.729

A woman fetched him to come to some date palms of hers, to

726. A ritual used to invoke blessings on newborns, cf. Avner Gil’adi, “Some Notes on Tahnik in Medieval Islam.”
727. Cf. Diyarbakrī, II, 158.
pray for them on her behalf; then she cut off all their date clusters on the day of 'Aqrabā'. They had learned [that Musaylimah was a fraud], and it had become clear to them, but the wretch overcame them.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Khulayd b. Zufar al-Namari—'Umayr b. Ṭalhah al-Namari:731 His father came to al-Yamāmah and said, "Where is Musaylimah?" At this people said, "Careful! [Call him] the Apostle of God!" So he replied, "No, [not] until I have seen him." So when he came to him he said, "You are Musaylimah?" He replied, "Yes." He said, "Who comes to you?" (Musaylimah) replied, "Rahmān." He asked, "Does [he come] in light or in darkness?" He replied, "In darkness." Whereupon he said, "I bear witness that you are a liar and that Muhammad tells the truth; but a liar of Rabi‘ah is dearer to us than a veracious person of Muṭṭar." So he was killed with [Musaylimah] at the battle of 'Aqrabā'.

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—al-Kalbi: the same [account], except that he said, "A liar of Rabi‘ah is dearer to me than a veracious person of Muṭṭar."

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Ṭalhah b. al-A‘lam—‘Ubayd b. ‘Umayr—a man of them:732 When Musaylimah learned of Khālid’s approach, he established his army at 'Aqrabā'. He called the people together to fight and people began to go out against him. Mujjā‘ah b. Murārah733 went out at the head of a raiding party, seeking blood revenge he had among Banū ‘Amir and Banū Tamīm.734 He feared that he might die, and hastened 730. The decisive battle between the Muslims and the followers of Musaylimah; cf. below, pp. 118ff.

733. Caskel, II, 419 and Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 300-301 have him linked to different clans of the tribe of Ḥanīfah. He is said to have come to the Prophet, who gave him tracts of land [ṣaqū’a-hu] in al-Yamāmah—perhaps actually only confirming his previous ownership; cf. Baladhurī, Futuh, 95. Since Khawlah bt. Jā‘far (see text, below, and note 736) was of al-Dul, it seems likely that Mujjā‘ah was of this clan also. Nuwayrī, 96: Mujjā‘ah b. Murārah b. Salmā.
to the task. As for their blood revenge among Banū 'Āmir, Khawlah bt. Ja'far was among them, so they kept him from her; but he abducted her [anyway]. As for his blood revenge among Banū Tamīm, [it was about] camels they took from him. Khālid received Shurahbil b. Hasanah and then sent him ahead, and ordered Khālid b. Fulān al-Makhzūmi over the vanguard; and he put over the two wings Zayd and Abū Hudhayfah. Musaylimah put over his two wings al-Muhakkam and al-Rajjāl; then Khālid marched, along with Shurahbil, until, when he was a day's march from the army of Musaylimah, he attacked Jubaylah Huju' with forty [men]—according to those who diminish the numbers—or sixty [men]—according to those who augment them. Lo and behold, there was Mujjā'ah and his companions; sleep had overcome them while they were returning from the Banū 'Āmir country, having passed by them and extricated Khawlah bt. Ja'far, who was with them. They stopped for a brief rest this side of the lowest part of the pass—the pass of al-Yamāmah; whereupon they found them asleep, with the leads of their horses in their hands under their cheeks, unaware that the army was near them. So they woke them up and said, "Who are you?" They said, "This is Mujjā'ah and these are Hanifah." They replied, "And who are you, may God not give you life?" Then they tied them up and waited until Khalid b. al-Walid came to them, and brought them to him. Khālid thought that they were coming to him to meet him and to take

735. Cairo: "his."
738. Cairo index identifies him as Zayd b. Ḥārithah; but possibly Zayd b. al-Khattāb; cf. p. 105, above. Diyārbakrī, II, 211 has Zayd b. al-Khattāb, Abū Ḥudhayfah b. 'Utbah b. Rabi'ah, with other individuals and posts listed being different from version in the text.
740. Lit., "the march of a night."
741. Manuscript B, Cairo: "Jubaylah Hujūm."
742. Thaniyyah, "mountain pass" or possibly "mountain."
precautions against him in his business.\(^{743}\) So he said, "When did you hear about us?" They replied, "We weren't aware of you; we were only returning from a [raid for] blood vengeance of ours among those around us of Banū 'Amir and Tamim." (If they had been wise, they would have said, "We [wished to] receive you when we heard of you.") So Khālid ordered that they be killed. They were all ready to give their lives protecting Mujjā'ah b. Murārah; so they said, "If you wish good or evil with the people of al-Yamāmah tomorrow, spare this one and do not kill him." So Khālid killed them and kept Mujjā'ah imprisoned with himself, as a hostage.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Ṭalḥah—ʔIkrimah—Abū Hurayrah and 'Abdallāh b. Sa‘īd—Abū Sa‘īd—Abū Hurayrah: Abū Bakr had sent to al-Rajjāl to come to him and receive his charge; then he sent him to the people of al-Yamāmah, being of the opinion that he was being truthful when he responded to him. According to Abū Hurayrah:\(^{744}\) I was sitting with the Prophet in a group of us among whom was al-Rajjāl b. ‘Unfūwah, when [the Prophet] said: "Truly there is among you a man whose molar tooth, [when he is] in the fire, will be larger than [Mount] Uhud.\(^{745}\) [Eventually] the group passed away, and only al-Rajjāl and I remained [alive], so I was afraid because of this until al-Rajjāl rebelled with Musaylimah and testified that he was a prophet.\(^{746}\) The dissension\(^{747}\) of al-Rajjāl was more serious than the dissension of Musaylimah. Abū Bakr\(^{748}\) sent Khālid \(^{743}\) I.e., he thought they were coming to conclude a truce with him.

---

\(^{744}\) Cf. Ibn Ḥajar, Isābah, s.v. "al-Rajjāl."

\(^{745}\) Cf. p. 118. The hadith occurs in Ibn Mājah, Sunan, II, 1445 (no. 4122). The meaning is that the body of the unbeliever who has gone to hell will be enlarged so that it will suffer more, the molar tooth will be larger than Mt. Uhud, by Medina, and the rest of the body enlarged proportionately. Many variants are listed in Wensinck, Concordance, III, 508. I thank Dr. Iftikhar Zaman for clarifying this hadith for me.

\(^{746}\) Although the text does not indicate as much, it seems likely that the account of Abū Hurayrah ends here, and that the following paragraph is transmitted not by him but by I‘krīmah and Abū Sa‘īd.

\(^{747}\) Fitnah. E. Landau-Tasseron notes that the word here is close to "its original meaning, i.e., an error caused by Satan's temptation" [personal communication]. For a clearer sense of what the sentence means, see p. 120, below.

\(^{748}\) Cf. Diyarbakri, II, 211 top. against them, so he marched until, when he reached the pass of al-Yamāmah, he encountered Mūjja'ah b. Murārah, a chief of Banū Ḥanīfah, with a company from his tribe, intending to raid the Banū 'Āmir in search of blood vengeance. They were twenty-three horsemen and cameleers. They had stopped for a brief rest; but Khalīd took them by surprise at night in their camp, whereupon he asked, "Whence did you hear about us?" To which they replied, "We had not heard about you, we had only gone out to exact a blood vengeance due to us from the Banū 'Āmir." So Khalīd ordered that their heads be cut off, sparing Mūjja'ah. Then he marched to al-Yamāmah, but Musaylimah and the Banū Ḥanīfah went out when they heard of Khalīd and encamped at Agraba', whereupon he alighted there with them. Now Agraba' was on the outskirts of al-Yamāmah this side of the flocks with the cultivated land of al-Yamāmah at their backs. Shurahbīl b. Musaylimah said, "Oh Banū Ḥanīfah, today is the day of vigilance; today, if you are defeated, [your] womenfolk will be carried off on horseback as captives, and will be taken as wives without being demanded in marriage. So fight for your reputations and defend your women." So they fought at Agraba'. The standard of the Muhājirūn was with Salīm, the mawlā of Abū Ḥudhayfah, but (the Muhājirūn) said, "Do we have anything to fear from you for our own sake?" At this he replied, "What a bad bearer of

750. Dūn al-amwāl; possibly we should translate amwāl as "property," but the meaning proposed would place 'Aqra'ā in a logical defensive situation—far enough out to defend the cultivated land (rif), but still firmly within the territory controlled by the Banū Ḥanīfah and/or its pastoral allies.
752. Reading ghayr khatībat with Cairo, Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149, and Emendanda; possibly "without being honored" or "not esteemed" (ghayr haziyyāt), as in text, Nuwayrī, 91, and Ibn Ḥubaysh, 45 bottom.
753. Cf. p. 105, above and p. 121, below; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 39 top, 40 bottom.
754. A Persian slave from Istakhr, he was one of the favored companions; he was later freed, then adopted, by Abū Ḥudhayfah. One of the most knowledgeable reciters of Qurʾān. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, II, 245–47.
755. The Muhājirūn ask Sālim if he thinks he is able to defend their battle standard effectively, or whether he fears he may be incapable of doing it well enough, in which case it is a matter of concern to all of them.
the Qur'an I would be, then!" The standard of the Anšār was with Thābit b. Qays b. Shammās,756 and the nomads [al-ʿarab] were organized according to their standards, and Mujjāʾah was prisoner with Umm Tamim in her tent. The Muslims were dealt a setback, and people757 from Banū Ḥanīfah entered upon Umm Tamim and wanted to kill her, but Mujjāʾah stopped them, saying, "I am her protector; what an excellent, noble-born woman she is!" So he kept them from her. The Muslims returned, wheeling around against them so that Banū Ḥanīfah was put to flight. At this al-Muḥakkam b. al-Ṭufayl said,758 "Oh Banū Ḥanīfah, enter the walled garden; meanwhile I will defend your backs." So he fought behind them for an hour; then God killed him ('Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Bakr759 killed him). The unbelievers entered the garden; Waḥshī killed Musaylimah just as a man of the Anšār was striking him, so he shared with him in it.

According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq: a similar account to this account of Sayf, except that he said:760 When it became morning Khalīd called for Mujjāʾah and those who had been taken with him, and said: "Oh Banū Ḥanīfah, what do you have to say?" They replied, "We say, 'A prophet from us and a prophet from you.'" So761 he put them to the sword, until when there remained of them [only] a man called Sāriyāh b. ʿĀmir,762 and Mujjāʾah b. Muṭrārah, Sāriyāh said to [Khalīd], "Oh man, if you wish good or evil in this town tomorrow,763 then spare this man," meaning Mujjāʾah. So Khalīd ordered that he be bound in irons; then he sent him to 757. Cf. p. 118, below, and parallels noted there; also Ibn Ḥubaysh, 42, and Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 363, which have the story as here.

758. Cf. Balansi, 94; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 45 bottom, 47 top.
759. Son of the first caliph.
760. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 33 middle; Caetani, 642.
763. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 35: "if you wish good or evil with the people of al-Yamāmah."
his wife, Umm Tamim, and said, "Look after him well." Then he proceeded until he encamped at al-Yamamah upon a dune overlooking al-Yamamah, and established his army in it. The people of al-Yamamah came out with Musaylimah; he had sent ahead with his vanguard al-Rahhal b. 'Unfuwah b. Nahshal. [According to al-Tabari, Ibn Humayd spells the name thus, with "h," not al-Rajjal as other authorities have it]. Al-Rahhal was a man of Banu Hanifah who had embraced Islam and recited the Sūrah of The Cow. Then when he came to al-Yamamah, he testified to Musaylimah that the Apostle of God had made him a partner in authority, so he was more significant in [sowing] discord among the people of al-Yamamah than was Musaylimah [himself]. The Muslims were asking about al-Rahhal, fearing that he would dull their cause with the people of al-Yamamah through his Islam. Then he met them with the first of the army squadrons. Khalid b. al-Walid, while he was sitting upon his seat in the company of the notables of the people, the people being at their battle stations, had said while he looked at the flashing swords among Banu Hanifah, "Oh company of Muslims, rejoice, for God has protected you from the cause of your enemy. The force has withdrawn, if God wills." At this al-Mujjah looked while he was behind him bound in irons, and then said, "No, by God, but it is the Indian swords; they feared that they would shatter, so they exposed them to the sun so that they would be flexible for them"; and it was as he said. Then when they met the Muslims, the first who met them was al-Rahhal b. 'Unfuwah, whereupon God killed him.

According to Ibn Humayd—Salamah—Muhammad b. Ishāq— a chief of Banu Hanifah—Abū Hurayrah: The Apostle of God said one day while Abū Hurayrah and Raḥhāl b. 'Unfuwah 764. On the name cf. p. 107, above.

---

765. The second, and longest, of the chapters or sūrahs of the Qur'ān; presumably this means that he could recite it from memory.
766. Fitnah.
767. Cf. Balansi, 77, Diyārbakrī, II, 211 bottom: "so that they [we] could meet them." Ibn Ḥubaysh, 39: "to warm up their blades" (li-taskhun mutūna-hum), for the morning was cold. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 47 bottom; Baladhuri, Futūḥ, 88. were in a group meeting with him, "Oh company, the molar tooth of one of you in hellfire on the Day of Judgment will be larger than Uhud." \(^{768}\) Abū Hurayrah said, "The group passed away and only Rahhlā b. 'Unfuwah and I survived, whereupon I remained frightened because of this until I heard of the rebellion of Rahhlā, at which I felt secure and knew that what the Apostle of God had said was true." Then the people met [in battle], \(^{769}\) and no war of the Arabs had ever met them like [this] war; \(^{770}\) so the people fought intensely until the Muslims were put to flight and Banū Ḥanifah reached Mujjad'ah and Khālid, so that Khālid left his tent. The people \(^{771}\) entered the tent in which Mujjad'ah was with Umm Tamim, and a man attacked her with a sword; whereupon Mujjad'ah said, "Stop! I am her protector, and what an excellent, noble-born woman she is! Attack the men!" So they reduced the tent to tatters with swords. Then the Muslims called to one another; such that Thābit b. Qays said, "How bad is that to which you have made yourselves accustomed, \(^{772}\) oh company of Muslims! Oh God, I have nothing to do with what these ones worship," \(^{773}\) [meaning the people of al-Yamāmah], "and I have nothing to do with what these ones do" [meaning the Muslims]. Then he waded into battle with his sword until he was killed. Zayd b. al-Khattāb, when the people became removed from their saddles, said, "There is no retreating after al-Rahhlā." Then he fought until he was killed. Then al-Barā' b. Mālik, \(^{774}\) brother of Anas

---

\(^{768}\) Cf. p. 114, above.
\(^{769}\) Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 363; Diyārbakrī, II, 212.
\(^{770}\) I.e., they had never seen the Arabs [i.e., nomads] fighting this intensely before.
\(^{772}\) Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 363: bi'sa mā 'awwad tum anfusa-kum; Diyārbakrī, II, 212, Balansi, 79: bi'sa mā 'awwad tum anfusa-kum al-farār; Ibn Hubaysh, 45 bottom: bi'sa mā 'awwad tum al-ārāb, said by 'iyād b. Bishr; Nuwayrī, 92, has bi'sa mā da'awtum anfusakum ilayhi, which means "how bad is that to which you have summoned yourselves."
\(^{773}\) Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 363: "I have nothing to do with what these ones do."
Musaylimah the Liar and His Tribe 119

b. Malik,775 stood up; now whenever he faced battle, he used to be overcome by tremors so that men [had to] sit upon him; then he would shake violently beneath them until he urinated in his trousers. When he urinated he would be aroused as a lion is aroused. Now when he saw what the people had done, he was overcome in this manner so that the men sat upon him; then, after he had urinated, he sprang up saying, "Where [are they], oh company of Muslims? I am Bara’ b. Malik, come on with me!"

A group of the rear guard of the army returned and fought the enemy until God killed them and they reached Muḥakkam al-Yamāmah, who was Muḥakkam b. al-Ṭufayl. When the fighting reached him, [Muḥakkam] said,776 "Oh company of Banū Ḥanifah, now the noble-born women will be carried off unwillingly behind [the riders as captives], and will be taken as wives without being requested in marriage.777 So display whatever nobility you have." Then he fought intensely; 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Bakr al-Siddiq shot him with an arrow, hitting him in his throat and killing him.

Then778 the Muslims advanced until they made them take refuge in the walled garden, the "garden of death," in which was the enemy of God, Musaylimah the liar. So al-Bara’ said, "Oh company of Muslims, throw me onto them in the garden," but the people told Bara’ that they would not do so. Whereupon he said, "By God, you surely shall cast me upon them in it!" So he was hoisted up until, when he overlooked the garden from the wall, he leapt down, fighting them from the gate of the garden in order to open it for the Muslims. The Muslims entered upon them in [the garden] and they fought until God killed Musaylimah the enemy of God. Wahshi,779 mawlā of Jubayr b.

776. Cf. Diyarbakri, II, 216; Balansi, 93–94.

779. Cf. Diyarbakri, II, 216; Balansi, 95.
Muṭ‘im,\textsuperscript{780} and a man of the Anšār were partners in killing him, both of them striking him; as for Wahṣī, he thrust his javelin against him, whereas the Anšārī struck him with his sword. Wahṣī used to say, “Your Lord knows which of us killed him.”

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Ṭalḥah—‘Ubayd b. ‘Umayr: Al-Rajjāl was opposite Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb, so when their two battle lines drew near, Zayd said, “Oh Rajjāl, God! God! For by God, you have abandoned the faith. Truly what I summon you to is nobler for you and greater for your present life.” But he refused; so the two drew [their swords]. Then al-Rajjāl and the zealous supporters of Musaylimah’s cause among the Banū Ḥanifah were killed; but [the enemy] encouraged one another and each group attacked [those] in its vicinity, so that the Muslims retreated as far as their camp. Then they fell upon them, cutting the tent ropes, slashing them, and busying themselves with the army. They struggled with Mujjāḥ, intending [to seize] Umm Tamīm, but he protected her, saying, “How excellent is the mistress of the tent!”

Zayd and Khalid and Abū Hudhayfah urged each other on and the people backed them up with words.\textsuperscript{782} Now it was a day of south wind with lots of dust, so Zayd said, “No, by God, I will not speak today, until either we defeat them or I meet God so that I may tell him of my devotion.”

---

\textsuperscript{780} Wahshi b. Ḥarb, an Abyssinian slave, was one of Mecca’s blacks; he was famed for having killed the Prophet’s uncle Ḥamzah at the battle of Uhud. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, V, 83–84. Jībāyr b. Muṭ‘īm, of the clan of Nawfāl of Quraysh, was a diplomat famed for his forbearance and firm, calm manner (ḥilm); he embraced Islam relatively late, at the conquest of Mecca or just before. Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, I, 271–72.

\textsuperscript{781} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 364–65; Dīyārbaḵrī, II, 216; Nuwayri, 95.

\textsuperscript{782} Lit., “the people spoke,” which is hardly clear. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149 considered “the people spoke” to be a “fairly unnecessary preparation” for Zayd’s statement, “I will not speak today.”

\textsuperscript{783} Lit., “tell Him of my evidence (ḥujjati),” i.e., make evident my devotion to Him through my martyrdom.
people, and strike your enemy and proceed straight ahead." So they did that, driving them back to their ranks until they made retreat farther than they had advanced from their army [in the first place]. Zayd was killed. Thabit spoke, saying, "Oh company of the Muslims, you are the party of God, and they are the parties of Satan; glory is to God and to His Apostle and to His parties. Advise me as I advise you." Then he began striking among them [with the whip] so that he drove them on. Abū Ḥudhayfah said, "Oh people of the Qur'ān, ornament the Qur'ān with [your] deeds." Then he drove them on until he penetrated them. Then he was struck down. Khalid b. al-Walid attacked, saying to his bodyguards, "Let no one approach me from behind." until [when] he was opposite Musaylimah, he sought his opportunity and lay in wait for Musaylimah.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Mubashshir b. al-Fudayl—Salim b. 'Abdallah: When Salim was given the battle standard on that day, he said, "How acquainted I am with the reason why you gave it to me! You said a bearer of the Qur'ān, and [that] he should stand fast just as the bearer of it before him stood fast, unto death." They replied, "Yes." Then they said, "Look how you should [do it]." At this he said, "What a bad bearer of the Qur'ān I would be if I did not stand fast!" The standard bearer before him had been 'Abdallāh b. Ḥafṣ b. Ghānim.

According to 'Abdallāh b. Sa‘īd b. Thābit and Ibn Isḥāq: When Mujja'ah said to the Banū Hanīfah, "Attack the men," and after a group of the Muslims had incited one another to fight, [Banū Hanīfah] affected a show of generosity and all the Muslims did likewise. Some of the companions of the the Apostle of God made addresses. Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb said, "By God, I shall not speak until I am victorious or until I am killed.

---

784. The Arabic phrase is awkward, but I believe it means this. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kamil, II, 363, ll. 15–16.
785. I.e., one who had memorized and could recite all or a large part of the holy text.
787. See the earlier account in which this episode occurs, pp. 117–18, above.
Do as I do!” Then he attacked, and his companions attacked [also]. Thābit b. Qays said, “How bad is that to which you have accustomed yourselves, oh company of Muslims! Now get away from me,” so that I can show you [how to] fight!” Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb was killed.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Mubashshir—Sālim:789

When `Abdallāh b. ʿUmar returned [to ʿUmar], ʿUmar said, “Why weren’t you killed before Zayd? Zayd has died and you are still alive.” Whereupon he replied, “I coveted that that should come to pass, but my soul drew back, whereas God honored him with martyrdom.”

According to Sahl, [ʿUmar] said: “What brought you [back] even though Zayd was killed? Why didn’t you hide your face from me?” [ʿAbdallāh b. ʿUmar] said, “He asked God for martyrdom, and it was given to him. I strove that it should be sent to me, but I was not granted it.”

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Ṭālḥah b. al-ʿA’lam—ʿUbayd b. ʿUmar:791 The Muhājirūn and the Ānṣār accused the people of the desert of cowardice, and the people of the desert accused them of cowardice, saying to one another, “Organize yourselves separately792 so that we may shun those who flee on the day [of battle], and may know on the day [of battle] from where we are approached [by the enemy].” 793 So they did that. The settled people said to the people of the desert, “We know more about fighting settled people than you do.” Whereupon the people of the desert replied, “Settled people do not excel at fighting, and do not know what war is; so you will see, when you organize us separately, from where weakness comes.” So they organized separately. No day [of battle] more intense or 788. Ḥākadhā `anni.

---

790. Zayd was ʿUmar’s brother; ʿAbdallāh, ʿUmar’s son.
792. Here and in the following passages, imtāza, lit., “distinguish, discriminate.” The subsequent passages make it clear that the idea was to place members of particular groups together, so that the relative performance of each group in battle would be more readily apparent.
793. I.e., so that we may know who has failed to hold the enemy confronting him.
greater in casualties was ever seen than that day. It was not known which of the two groups inflicted heavier casualties [on the enemy], but the wounded were more numerous among the Muhājirūn and the Anṣār794 than they were among the people of the desert, and those who survived were always in distress.795
'Abd al-Rahmān b. Abū Bakr796 shot al-Muḥakkam with an arrow, killing him while he was delivering a speech, whereupon he cut his throat. Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb killed al-Rajjāl b.
'Unfuwah.

According to al-Sāri—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—al-Dahhāk b. Yarbu‘— his father—a man of Banū Suḥaym797 who witnessed [the battle] with Khālid:798 The advantage on that day was sometimes against the Muslims and sometimes against the unbelievers.
When the fighting became intense, Khālid said, "Oh people, organize separately so that we may know the valor of each clan and know from where we are approached [by the enemy]." So the people of the settlements and of the desert organized themselves separately; the tribes of the desert people and of the settled people organized themselves separately, the descendants of each ancestor standing behind their banner to fight together.
On that day the people of the desert said, "Now the killing will grow intense among the weaker flock";799 then the killing did become intense among the people of the settlements. Musaylimah stood firm, and he was in the eye of the storm;800 at which Khālid realized that it would not abate except through the death of Musaylimah, as long as the Banū Ḥanīfah took no heed of the death of those who had been killed among them. Thereon Khālid came out against the enemy until, when he was opposite the [enemy] line, he put out a challenge for single combat and raised his lineage, saying, "I am the son of al-Walīd 794. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 364: among the Muhājirūn, Anṣār, and the villagers.

795. I.e., they were in the most intense fighting.
799. Reading ajzā‘, "flock," with Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149, Emendanda, and Cairo, for the text’s ajdha‘.
800. Lit., "their mill turned around him."
the experienced, I am the son of Āmir and Zayd," and he shouted their battle slogan of that day. Their slogan that day was "Oh Muḥammad!" So he killed everyone who came out against him in single combat. All the while he was reciting,

I am the son of chiefs, and my sword is the Vehement, all the greater when rage overcomes you.

Whatever came out in single combat against him he defeated. The Muslims fought intensely and effectively. Then, when Khalīd drew near to Musaylimah, he called out [to him]. Now the Apostle of God had said, "With Musaylimah is a devil that he does not disobey, and whenever [the devil] comes to him, he foams [at the mouth] such that his cheeks are two gobs of froth; [Musaylimah] never forms the intention of doing any good thing, but [this devil] diverts him from it. So when you should see this opening with him, seize the opportunity!" So when Khalīd drew near to [Musaylimah], he was searching for that. He saw [Musaylimah] standing fast with the [battle] swirling around him, and he knew that it would not cease unless [Musaylimah] was killed. So he called to Musaylimah, searching for his opening, upon which [Musaylimah] answered him. Then [Khalīd] showed Musaylimah some things he liked, saying, "If we agree to half, then which half would you give us?" Now when he was considering his answer, he had turned his face away in seeking advice, but his devil for bade him to accept; so he turned his face away [another] time because of that. Khalīd followed him closely on his mount to overtake him, so that he retreated and [his followers] yielded. Then Khalīd incited the army, saying, "Here you are! Don't let them go!" They rode closely after them, and routed them. As Musaylimah stood up after the people had fled from him, some people said, "Where 802. Lit., "The mill of the Muslims turned, and ground."

803. 'Awrah, lit., "opening in the defenses of an enemy," or possibly, "shameful thing."
804. Lit., "do not forgive him his error!"
805. A reference to Musaylimah's alleged offer to divide the earth with the Prophet; cf. p. 133, below and p. 93, above.
806. The text of this sentence is awkward.
807. Cf. Diyārbugrī, II, 216; Balansī, 94. is what you used to promise us?" To which he replied, "Fight for your own reputations!"

Al-Muḥakkam[^808] cried, "Oh Banū Ḥanīfah, the garden! the garden!" Now Wahšī was coming upon Musaylimah while he was foaming [at the mouth], barely able to stand and unthinking from the fit [that had overtaken him], so he bared his lance on him and killed him. The people stormed upon them [in] the "garden of death" from its walls and gates, so that 10,000 fighting men[^809] were killed in the battle and the "garden of death."

According to al-Sarī—Sat'ayb—Sayf—Ṭalḥah—'Amr b. Shu'ayb and Ibn Ishaq: After they had organized themselves separately and had stood fast and Banū Ḥanīfah had retreated, the Muslims pursued them, killing them until they got them to the "garden of death." Then they differed [in opinion] regarding the killing of Musaylimah there; some say that he was killed in it, whereupon [the Banū Ḥanīfah] entered it and [the Muslims] locked them in it and surrounded them. Al-Barā' b. Mālik[^810] screamed, "Oh company of Muslims, lift me onto the wall so that you may throw me onto them." So they did that, with the result that, when they placed him on the wall, he was thunderstruck at what he saw, and called out, "Lower me [back] down." Then he said, "Lift me up," so they did that again. Then out of fear he said, "Ugh to this!" and asked to be lifted up again. Whereupon when they placed him upon the wall, he leapt upon them to fight them by the gate, until he had opened it for the Muslims, who were by the gate on the outside. At this [the Muslims] entered [the garden]; then he locked the gate upon them and threw the key over the wall. So they fought more bitterly than has ever been seen. Those of them who were in the garden perished after Musaylimah had been killed. Banū Ḥanīfah had said to him[^811] "Where is what you used to promise us?" To which he had replied, "Fight for your own reputations!"

[^808]: Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 364; Nuwayrī, 92.
[^809]: That is, on the Muslim side.
[^810]: Cf. p. 119, above; diyārbakrī, II, 214–15, who attributes this episode to Abū Dajānah; Balansi, 87, another version; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 45, another version; Ibn Hubaysh, 46.
[^811]: Cf. p. 125, above.
According to al-Sarî—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Hârûn and Tâlîhah and Ibn Ishaq: When someone cried out that the black slave had killed Musaylimah, Khâlid went out with Mujjâ‘ah shackled in irons to show him Musaylimah and the banners of his army. He came across al-Rajjâl and said, "This is al-Rajjâl."

According to Ibn Humayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishaq: When the Muslims had finished with Musaylimah, Khâlid was approached and informed [of this], so he went out, taking Mujjâ‘ah in irons with him in order to show him Musaylimah. Then he began to show him the slain until he passed Muhakkâm b. al-Tufayl—he was a corpulent, comely man—whereupon Khâlid said, "This is your companion." He replied, "No, by God, this one is better than he and more noble; this is Muḥakkâm al-Yamânah."

Then Khâlid continued showing him the slain until he entered the garden, upon which he rummaged through the bodies for him; then lo, there was a small, yellowish, flat-nosed man, whereupon Mujjâ‘ah said, "This is your companion, whom you have finished off." So Khâlid said to Mujjâ‘ah, "This is your companion, who did with you what he did." He replied, "[So] it was, oh Khâlid; but, by God, only the most expeditious of the people came [against] you; the majority of the people are [still] in the fortresses." At this Khâlid said, "Woe to you, what are you saying?" He replied, "By God, it is the truth; so come on, let me conclude a treaty with you in exchange for the safety of my tribe."

According to al-Sarî—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—al-Dahhâk—his father: There was a man of the Banû ʿĀmir b. Ḥanîfah, named al-Aghlāb b. ʿĀmir b. Ḥanîfah, who had the thickest neck of anyone of his time. When the polytheists had been defeated on that day and the Muslims surrounded them, he pretended he was dead. Then, when the Muslims were inspecting the slain, a man of the Anṣâr named Abû Başîrah and some people along with him came upon [al-Aghlab]. When they saw him lying among the slain, taking him for dead, they said, "Oh Abū Baṣīrah, you are always claiming that your sword is exceedingly sharp; so cut the head off this dead al-Aghlab. If you cut it off, everything we have learned about your sword will be true." So he unsheathed it and then strode toward him. Now they were sure he was dead, but when (Abu Basirah) drew near him, [al-Aghlab] sprang up to run away from him. Abu Basirah followed him and began saying, "I am Abū Baṣīrah al-Anṣāri!" Al-Aghlab began to run quickly and the distance between them only increased; every time Abu Basirah said that, al-Aghlab would say, "What do you think of the running of your brother the unbeliever?" until he escaped.

812. Cf. Ibn al-Athîr, Kâmîl, II, 365; Diyârbakrî, II, 217 bottom; Balansî, 104; Nuwayrî, 93.

According to al-Sari-Shu`ayb-Sayf-Sahl b. Yūsuf-al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad: When Khalid had finished with Musaylimah and the army, 'Abdallāh b. 'Umar and 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Abi Bakr said to him, "March with us and the army to encamp against the fortresses." But he replied, "Let me [first] deploy the cavalry in order to catch those who were not in the fortresses; then I will see [what] my opinion [is]." Thereupon he deployed the cavalry, so that they rounded up what they found of livestock and women and children, and attached this to the army. He ordered a march to encamp against the fortresses, so Mujjā'ah said to him, "By God, only the most expeditious of the people came [against] you, and the fortresses are full of men. So come on, make a truce with my following." So he made a truce with him including everything short of [their] persons. Then he said, "I will go out to them to ask their advice, and we will look into this matter; then I will return to you." So Mujjā'ah entered the fortresses, in which were 815. The pre-Islamic Arabs customarily identified themselves to their enemies in the course of battle, often as a form of boasting: "I am so-and-so, take this blow!" (E. Landau-Tasseron, personal communication).

---

816. Cf. Ibn Durayd, Al-Ishtiqāq, 184, for a slightly different version and a Muhādjir as the hero.
818. māl; perhaps, "property."
819. Cf. Manuscript B and Nuwayri, 94: "attached them."
820. Cf. p. 126, above, and references there.
nothing but women and children and worn-out elders and weak men. So he dressed the women in iron breastplates and ordered them to let down their hair and to make themselves visible from the tops of the fortresses until he should return to them. Then he went back and came to Khalid, saying, "They have refused to permit what I arranged. Some of them had a commanding view of you, in opposing me. They [will] have nothing to do with me." At this, Khalid looked at the peaks of the fortresses, which had become black. Now the war had worn the Muslims down, and the encounter had become drawn out, and they yearned to return in triumph, and did not know what might happen if there were in [the fortresses] men and fighting. There had been killed on that day 360 of the Muhājirūn and Anṣār of the people of the chief city of Medina.

According to Sahl: Of the Muhājirūn not of the people of Medina, and of the children of companions of the Prophet, 300 of the former and 300 of the latter were killed, totaling 600 or more. Thābit b. Qays was killed on that day. A man of the polytheists killed him; his foot was cut off, so his killer threw it and killed him. Of Banū Ḥanīfah were killed in the plain at 'Aqraba' 7,000, and 7,000 in the "garden of death," and in pursuit something like that [number]. Dirār b. al-Azwar said regarding the battle day of al-Yamāmah:

---

821. Presumably young men (e.g., warriors) wore their hair long and flowing, whereas women and older men had their hair bound up and covered.

822. Mujājah suggests that the people in the fortress could see the strength of Khalid's forces, and implies that they rejected Khalid's offer because they were not intimidated by his forces.

823. I.e., with people.

824. The text of the following paragraph—especially the numbers—is confused. Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 365: "360 of Muhājirūn and Anṣār of the people of Medina had been killed, and of the Muhājirūn of places other than Medina, [another] 360."

825. al-tābi‘ūn bi-ihsān, lit., "those who follow in good works," refers to the offspring of the Muhājirūn, Anṣār, and other "companions of the Prophet" (sahāba).

826. Cairo and Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, has "his foot was cut off, so Thābit took it and beat [the attacker] with it until he killed him."

827. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 65, which has verses 1, 3, 4, and 5, as well as four additional verses.
If the south wind were asked about us, it would tell; in the evening 'Aqrabā' and Malham flowed. And it flowed in the side branches of the watercourse, so that its rocks dribbled in it from the people with blood. In the evening, the spear is not satisfied with its place, nor the arrows, except the bone-cleaving Mashrafi sword. So if you seek unbelievers free of blame, [oh] south wind, indeed I am a follower of the faith, a Muslim. I strive [in God's way], because striving (jihād) is [itself] booty, and God knows best the man who strives.

According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishaq: Mujjā'ah said what he did to Khalīd because he had told him, 'Come on, so that I conclude a treaty with you in exchange for [the safety of] my tribe,' [saying this] to a man whom the war had exhausted, and with whom many leaders of the people had been struck down. He had weakened, and yearned for rest and truce. So he said, "Come on, so that I may reconcile you," and then made a truce with Khalīd on condition [of paying] gold, silver, suits of mail, and half the captives. Then he said, "I shall go to the tribe to present them what I have arranged." So he went out to them and said to the women, "Put on the armor and then make yourselves visible from atop the fortresses." So they did that; then he returned to Khalīd. Now Khalīd thought that what he had seen on the fortresses, wearing armor, were men, so when (Mujjd'ah) got to Khalīd he said, "They rejected [the conditions] upon which I made a truce with you. But if you wish, I will arrange something and then entreat the tribe [to accept it]." (Khalīd) said, "What is it?" He replied, "That you should take from me one quarter of the captives, and let a quarter of them go." Khālid said, "Done," and (Mujjā’ah) said, "Agreed, then." Subsequently, after the two of them were finished, the fortresses were opened and lo! there was no one in them but women and children. Whereupon Khālid said to Mujjā’ah, "Woe to you! You deceived me!" He replied, "[They were] my own kinsmen, I had to do what I did."

828. A fortified village in a date-palm oasis, ca. 75 km northwest of Hair: Thilo, s.v.; Yaqūt, s.v.; TAVO B VII 1. Ibn Ḥubaysh reads "in the evening 'Aqrabā' flowed with blood."
829. So called because they were made in the highlands (mashā'if) of Syria or Yemen. Cf. Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, IV, 1537 and 1539.
830. Ibn Ḥubaysh: we strive.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf: The second thing Mujjā’ah said on that day was, "If you wish to accept from me half the captives and [all] the gold and silver and suits of mail and the horses, I shall entreat [my tribe to accept], and will draw up a truce between me and you." So Khālid did that, making an agreement with him on condition of [payment of] the gold, silver, suits of mail, and horses, and of half the captives, and of a garden of Khālid's choice in every settlement and of a farm of Khālid's choice; whereupon they concluded the truce mutually on those terms. Then he released him and said, "You have three [days] to choose: by God, if you do not complete and accept I shall attack you; then I shall never accept from you any terms except death." So Mujjā’ah came to them and said, "Accept for now." But Salamah b. ‘Umayr al-Ḥanafi replied, "No, by God, we shall not accept. We shall send to people of settlements and to slaves [for reinforcement], and we shall fight and not make terms with Khālid. For the fortresses are strong and the food plentiful, and winter has come." So Mujjā’ah said, "You are an unlucky man, and you are kidding yourself; [in fact] I deceived the people so that they would agree with me in the truce. Does there remain among you anyone worth anything or who has any [power of] resistance [left]? I went ahead of you [in making the truce] only [to act] before what Shurahbil b. Musaylimah said should befall you." So Mujjā’ah went out as the seventh of seven [men] until he came to Khālid and said, after he had affirmed what they had approved, “Write your document.” So he wrote: “This is what Khalid b. al-Walid made a truce with Mujja’ah b. Murârah and Salamah b. ‘Umayr and So-and-so and So-and-so about: he bound them to [payment of] gold, silver, half the captives, suits of mail, horses, a garden in every village, and a farm on condition that they embrace Islam. Then you will be secure in God’s safety; you will have the protection of Khalid b. al-Walid and the protection of Abū Bakr, successor of the Apostle of God, and the protections of the Muslims in good faith.”

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Ṭalhah—‘Ikrimah—Ibn Hurayrah: When Khalid made a truce with Mujja’ah, he did so on [condition of payment of] gold, silver, coats of mail, and every garden that pleased us in every district, and half of those enslaved, but they rejected that, so Khalid said, “You have three days to decide.” Then Salamah b. ‘Umâr said, “Oh Banû Ḥanifah, fight for your reputations and do not make a truce on any terms, for the fortress is strong, the food plentiful, and winter has come.” To this Mujja’ah replied, “Oh Banû Ḥanifah, obey me and defy Salamah—for he is an unlucky man—before [the fate] of which Shurahbil b. Musaylimah spoke befalls you, before the women are carried off against their will on the backs of horses and are taken to wife without being demanded in marriage.” So they obeyed him and renounced Salamah, and accepted his decision.

Now Abū Bakr had sent Salamah b. Salâh b. Wâqsh with a letter to Khalid, ordering him, if God had given him victory, to execute everyone of Banû Ḥanifah over whose face a razor had passed. So he arrived, but found that Khalid had concluded a truce with them. Then Khalid observed [the truce] for them and kept to [the terms] that were in it. Banû Ḥanifah were made to congregate before Khalid for the oath of allegiance and to renounce what they had formerly done. Khalid was in

---

838. Or: “on condition that they submit.”
839. al-mamlûkin, i.e., the captives of war.
his camp, so when they gathered, Salamah b. ‘Umayr said to Mujja’ah, “Ask permission for me to have an audience with Khālid, so that I may speak to him about a matter of mine that concerns him and for advice’; but he had resolved to assassinate him. So [Mujja’ah] spoke to him so that he gave him permission [to enter]; then Salamah b. ‘Umayr approached with the sword hidden in his clothing, intending [to carry out] what he wished. At this, [Khālid] said, “Who is this approaching?” Mujja’ah replied, “This is the one I spoke to you about, to whom you gave permission [to enter].” Khālid said, “Get him away from me!” So they expelled him from [Khālid’s] presence; then they searched him and found the sword on him, whereupon they cursed and vilified him and tied him up. They said, “You wanted to destroy your tribe, by God! You wanted nothing less than that Banū Ḥanifah be extirpated and [their] children and women be captive, by God! If Khālid had known that you carried weapons, he would have killed you. We are not free from fear that, if he learns of it, he may yet kill the men and take the women captive for what you did, reckoning that it was done in consultation with us.” So they bound him and put him in the fortress. Banū Ḥanifah continued to make their renunciation of what they had previously done and to make their conversion to Islam. Salamah promised them that he would do nothing else if they would forgive him, but they refused, for they did not feel safe accepting a promise from him on account of his stupidity. Then one night he escaped and headed for the camp of Khālid; so the guards cried out to him. Banū Ḥanifah were terrified and pursued him. They caught up with him in one of the gardens, whereupon he attacked them with his sword; so they surrounded him in the rocks. He passed the sword around his own throat, cutting his jugular veins. Then he fell into a well and died.

According to al-Sarī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—al-Ḍahḥak b. Yarbu’—his father: Khālid concluded a treaty with all of Banū Ḥanifah except those who were in al-‘Irḍ and al-Qurayyah,845 they were taken captive when the raiding parties were sent out. So he sent to Abū Bakr 500 persons of those who had undergone the division [of booty] from al-’Irṣ and al-Qurayyah, of the Banū Ḥanīfah or Qays b. Tha’labah or Yashkur.846

845. Al-‘Irḍ [Wādī Ḥanifah] was the fertile main valley of the Yamāmah district. Al-Qurayyah was an oasis village ca. 60 km northwest of Ḥajr. Cf. Yāqūt, s. vv; Thilo, s. vv; TAVO B VII 1.

According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq:847 Then Khalīd said to Mujja’ah, “Give me your daughter in marriage.” At this, Mujja’ah said to him, “Take your time. You are destroying my reputation, and with mine, yours, in [the eyes of] your leader.” [But Khalīd] said, “Marry [her] to me, man!” so he did. News of that reached Abū Bakr, whereupon he wrote him a bloodcurdling letter:848 “Upon my life, oh son of Khalīd’s mother, are you so free as to marry women, while in the court of your house is the blood of 1,200 men of the Muslims that has not yet dried?” When Khalīd looked into the letter he began to say, “This is the work of the little left-handed man,” meaning ’Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb. Now Khalīd b. al-Walīd had sent a delegation of Banū Ḥanīfah to Abū Bakr. They came before him, so Abū Bakr said to them, “Woe to you! What made you do what you did?”849 They replied, “Oh successor of the Apostle of God, what you learned about what befell us was a man, upon whom and upon whose tribe God bestowed no blessing.” He responded to that, “What was it that attracted you to him?” They said, “He used to say,850 ‘Oh frog, croak, croak, you do not bar the one drinking, nor do you make the water turbid; to us half the earth, and to Quraysh half the earth, but Quraysh is a tribe that commits aggression.’” Abū Bakr said, “May God be exalted and woe to you! This talk comes neither from sacredness nor from piety, so where does it get you?”

When852 Khalīd b. al-Walīd was done with al-Yamāmah, his 847. Cf. Diyārbakrī, II, 218 bottom; Ibn Ḥubaysh, 56; Balansi, 109; Nuwayrī, 96.

848. Lit., “a letter dripping blood.”
849. Lit., “What is this that made slip from you what slipped?”
850. Cf. p. 109, above.
camp in which he used to meet people was Ubād, one of the watercourses of al-Yamāmah. Then he moved to one of its watercourses called al-Wabar,\(^{853}\) and it became his camp in it.

The People of al-Baḥrayn, the Apostasy of al-Ḥuṭam, and Those Who Joined with Him in al-Baḥrayn

Abū Ja'far said: Among the things we learned about the people of al-Baḥrayn and the apostasy of those who apostatized among them is the following:

According to 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa’d—his uncle Ya’qūb b. Ibrāhim—Sayf:\(^{854}\) Al-‘Alā’ b. al-Hadramī went out toward al-Baḥrayn. Part of the story of al-Baḥrayn was that the Prophet and al-Mundhir b. Sāwī fell ill in one and the same month; subsequently al-Mundhir died a little after the Prophet, and the people of al-Baḥrayn apostatized after [his death]. As for 'Abd al-Qays,\(^{855}\) they returned [to the fold], but Bakr\(^{856}\) persisted in their apostasy. The one who persuaded 'Abd al-Qays to turn back was al-Jārūd.\(^{857}\)

According to 'Ubaydallāh—his uncle—Sayf—Ismā’il b. Muslim—al-Ḥasan b. Abi al-Ḥasan:\(^{858}\) Al-Jārūd b. al-Mu’alla came to the Prophet, seeking him out, so he said, “Embrace Islām, oh Jārūd!” But Jārūd answered, “[I already] have a religion.”\(^{859}\) The Prophet replied to him, “Oh Jārūd, your religion is really nothing; it is not a religion.” So Jārūd said to him, “And if I were to embrace Islam, then whatever consequence [that might have] in \(^{853}\) Yāqūt has “Wabarah,” a village of al-Yamāmah; Hamdānī, 102, has “Wabrah.”

\(^{855}\) A major tribe of eastern Arabia, partly settled and partly nomadic, centered in the island Uwal (modern Baḥrayn) and Qaṭīf on the coast. See EI², s.v. “ʿAbd al-Ḵays” (S. M. Stern).

\(^{856}\) I.e., the Bakr b. Wā’il tribes; the rebel al-Ḥuṭam was of a Bakrī tribe, Qays
b. Tha’labā (cf. p. 137, below).

\(^{857}\) Bishr “al-Jārūd” b. al-Mu’alla was a Christian of ‘Abd al-Qays who came to the Prophet in AH 10 and embraced Islam. His name is given variously. Cf.
260–61.

\(^{858}\) Cf. Nuwayri, 99.

\(^{859}\) Din.
Islam would be your responsibility?"

The Prophet replied that it was so. So he embraced Islam and remained in Medina until he became learned [in the faith]. Then, when he wanted to leave, he said, "Oh Apostle of God, can we find among one of you camels on which we might reach [our destination]?” He replied, "We have no camels." He said, "Oh Apostle of God, I shall find on the road some of these strays." (Muḥammad) replied, "They are the burning of hellfire; beware of them!"

When

(al-Jārūd) came to his people, he invited them to Islam, whereupon they all responded to him. Then it was only a short time before the Prophet died and they apostatized; 'Abd al-Qays said, "If Muḥammad had been a prophet, he would not have died," and they apostatized. [Al-Jārūd] learned of that, so he sent to them to gather them together; then he stood up to address them, saying, "Oh company of 'Abd al-Qays! I shall question you about things, so tell me about them if you know about them, and do not respond if you do not know." They replied, "Ask about whatever crosses your mind." He said, "Do you know that, in the past, God had prophets?" They said, "Yes." He went on, "[And] do you know it [from what you have learned from others], or have you seen it [with your own eyes]?” They said, "No, rather we know it [from others]." He continued, "Then what became of them?” They replied, "They died." He said, "In truth, Muḥammad has died just as they died, and I bear witness that there is no god but God and that Muḥammad is His Servant and His Apostle.” They said, "And we [also] bear witness that there is no god but God and that Muḥammad is His Servant and His Apostle, and that you are our chief and the best of us.” So they stood firm in their Islam, and did not extend

---

861. According to Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, II, 551 col. 3, this refers to the tradition stating that "the stray animals of the believer are a cause of the burning of hellfire," i.e., that anyone taking possession of the Muslims’ stray beasts is in danger of hellfire. Hence in the preceding sentences, one must assume that the Prophet is stating only that there were no riding camels actually in the town at the moment, the Muslims' extra mounts being allowed to roam freely in the surroundings of Medina.

[their hands in evil to anyone], nor was [an evil hand] extended toward them; they did not get involved between the rest of Rabi‘ah,863 on the one hand, and al-Mundhir,864 and the Muslims, on the other. Al-Mundhir was busy with them [for the rest of] his life; then, after al-Mundhir died, his companions were besieged in two places until al-‘Ala’ saved them.

Abū Ja‘far said: as for Ibn Ishāq, he said the following about that, according to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishāq: When Khālid b. al-Walid was finished with al-Yamāmah, Abū Bakr sent al-‘Alā’ b. al-Ḥaḍramī. Al-‘Alā’ was the one whom the Apostle of God had sent to al-Mundhir b. Ṣāwī al-‘Abdi, with the result that al-Mundhir embraced Islām. So al-‘Alā’ stayed with them as commander for the Apostle of God. Then al-Mundhir b. Ṣāwī died in al-Bahrāyn after the death of the Apostle of God. Now ‘Amr b. al-‘Āṣ was in ‘Umān, the Apostle of God passing away while ‘Amr was there, whereupon ‘Amr approached, passing by al-Mundhir b. Ṣāwī while he was on the point of death. So (Amr) visited him, so that al-Mundhir said to him, “How much of his property did the Apostle of God assign to the dying person865 of the Muslims at the time of his death?” ‘Amr replied, “He used to stipulate a third.” He said, “Then what do you advise me to do with a third of my property?” ‘Amr replied, “If you wish, you may divide it among your close kinsmen, assigning it by way of welfare; or, if you wish, you may grant it as ṣadāqah, thereby assigning it as an inviolable grant of alms that will be paid after you to those upon whom you bestowed it.” [Al-Mundhir] said, “I would not like to make my property into something restricted, like the bahirah, the sa‘ibah, the wasilah, and the ḥāmi;866 rather, I shall divide it and transmit it to those to whom I bequeath it,

---

863. ‘Abd al-Qays was classified genealogically as part of Rabi‘ah b. Nizār.
865. ‘Lit., “the dead person.” The question involves how much of his property the dying person was allowed to distribute to heirs of his choice.
866. Cf. Qur‘ān 5:1103. The words refer to four types of camels which, for various reasons, it had been prohibited during the jahiliyyah to ride, to milk, to eat their flesh, to restrict in grazing, etc. These customs were prohibited by Islām. For the details, see Lane, Arabic-English Lexicon, I, 187 (s.v. bahirah); IV, 1481 (s.v. sa‘ibah); II, 652 (s.v. ḥāmi); and Ibn Manẓūr, II, 729 (s.v. wasilah).
that they may do with it as they please." So 'Amr used to marvel because of what he said.

Rabi'ah apostatized in al-Bahrayn among those Arabs who apostatized, except for al-Jārūd b. 'Amr b. Ḥanash b. al-Mu'allā, who stood firm in Islam along with those of his tribe who were with him. When he learned of the death of the Apostle of God and of the apostasy of the Arabs, he stood up and said, "I bear witness that there is no god but God; and I bear witness that Muhammad is His Servant and His Apostle; and I declare those who do not [so] bear witness to be unbelievers." Rabi'ah gathered in al-Bahrayn and apostatized, saying, "Let us return the kingship to the family of al-Mundhir." So they proclaimed al-Mundhir b. al-Nu'mān b. al-Mundhir to be king. He used to be called al-Gharūr ("the deceiver"); but when he had come to embrace Islam, and the people had embraced Islam and the sword had subdued them, he used to say, "I was not the deceiver, I was the deceived."

According to 'Ubaydallah b. Sa'd—his uncle—Sayf—Ismā'il b. Muslim—'Umayr b. Fulān al-'Abdī: After the Prophet died, al-Ḥuṭam b. Ḍubay'ah, a tribesman of Banū Qays b. Tha'labah, rebelled with those of Bakr b. Wā'il who followed him into apostasy, and with nonapostates who were still unbelievers who gathered 'round him, until he alighted at al-Qatif and Hajar. He stirred up al-Khaṭṭ and those Zuțt and Sabābijah in it to

---

867. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 73; Ḫiṣṣānī, XIV, 46; Nuwayri, 100.
868. Here and below, possibly "nomads."
869. Ibn Ḥubaysh: "the kingship has returned...."
870. Presumably the Lakhmids of al-Ḥirah, the most prominent of whom, al-Mundhir III (ruled AD 503–554) is referred to here; the last Lakhmid king was al-Nu'mān b. al-Mundhir (IV), ruled 580–602, whose son is mentioned in the next sentence. Cf. EI², s.v. "Lakhmids" (I. Shahid); Wathimah, 24/66.
871. Cf. p. 146, below, with different opinion on the name; Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 368; Balādhuri, Futūh, 84; Balansi, 145–46.
873. Large oasis on Persian Gulf coast, possibly the ancient Gerzha. Cf. EI², s.v. "Al-Ḳaṭīf" [G. Rentz].
874. The east Arabian coastal strip in Bahrayn and 'Uman; cf. Yāqūt, s.v.; EI², s.v. "Al-Ḳaṭīf" [A. Grohmann]; Wüstenfeld, 181.
875. Text has "Sayābījah." The Zuțt and Sabābijah were people of Indian origin who had settled around the Persian Gulf littoral (and later in Baṣrah); cf.
The Conquest of Arabia

rebel, and sent an army to Dārin. So they rose up on (al-Ḥuṭām's) behalf, in order to put 'Abd al-Qays between him and them. ('Abd al-Qays) was opposed to [these rebels], reinforcing al-Mundhir and the Muslims. And (al-Ḥuṭām) sent to al-Gharūr b. Suwayd, brother of al-Nu'mān b. al-Mundhir, and dispatched him to Juwāthā, saying, “Stand fast, for if I am victorious I shall make you king in al-Bahrayn, so that you may be like al-Nu'mān in al-Ḥirah.” He sent to Juwāthā; then he besieged the Muslims and pressed them, so that the siege became intense upon them. Among the besieged Muslims was one of their righteous men, called 'Abdallāh b. Ḥadhaf, one of the Banū 'Abū Bakr b. Kilāb. Now he and they were extremely hungry, so that they were on the verge of dying. About that 'Abdallāh b. Ḥadhaf said,

Make a messenger reach Abū Bakr and all the young men of Medina. Do you want to come to the aid of the noble tribe, sitting in Juwāthā, besieged? [It is] as if their blood [is] on every path [like] the rays of the sun, bedazzling those who watch. We relied on the Merciful One; Indeed we found that forbearance [is] for those who rely [on Him].

Manzūr, II, 294 and VII, 308; Balādhūrī, Futūḥ, 162 (“Sayābijah”); Pellat, Milieu bastien, 40–41.

876. A small island with port off the Arabian coast near al-Qaṭīf. Cf. Thilo, s.v.

878. Cf. Ḫāfānī, XIV, 46 and 48 on his name.

880. Ba’atha; one expects something like dhahaba, “he went.”

881. A branch of the Kilāb of 'Amīr b. Ṣa’ṣa’ah; cf. Caskel, I, Table 94 and II, 22.2.

882. Cf. Ibn Ḥuḥaysh, 71; Balansi, 139; Ḫāfānī, XIV, 46–47. Wathīmah, 25/67–68 drops verse 3, and adds after the last verse here: “We said: we were content with God as Lord and with Islam as a religion we were content.”

883. Ibn Ḥuḥaysh and Balansi: “and all the residents of Medina.”

885. al-raḥmān.

According to al-Sa`rî—Shu`ayb—Sayf—al-Ša`b b. `Atiyyah b. Bilâl—Sahm b. Minjâb—Minjâb b. Râshid: Abû Bakr sent al-`Âlâ’ b. al-Ḥaḍrâmî to be in charge of fighting the apostates in al-Bahrayn. So when he approached it and was opposite al-Yamâmah, Thumâmah b. Uthâl joined him with the Muslims of Banû Ḥanîfah, from Banû Suḥaym and from the people of the settlements of the rest of Banû Ḥanîfah; he had been waiting in uncertain expectation. (Abû Bakr) had dispatched `Ikrimah to "Umân and then to Mahrâh, and he had ordered Shurâhîl to remain where he was until Abû Bakr's order should reach him, then [to go to] Dûmah to raid the apostates of Quḍâ’âh with `Amr b. al-`Âs. As for `Amr b. al-`Âs, he was raiding Sa’d and Bâlî; and he ordered this one to [march against] Kalb, and mixed groups joined to them. Then, when [al-`Âlâ’ b. al-Ḥaḍrâmî] drew near us while we were in the high part of the country, there was no one of al-Ribâb or `Amr b. Tamîm who had a horse who did not lead (his horse) beside him, going out to receive (al-`Âlâ’). As for Banû Ḥanţalâh, they played for time. Mâlik b. Nuwayrah was in al-Bûtâh with groups with whom we contended, and Wâki’ b. Malik was in al-Qâra’ with groups that contended with `Amr. As for Sa’d b. Zayd Manât, they were two divisions: 'Awf and the Abnā' obeyed al-Zibriqān b. Badr, standing firm in their Islām; they were free of fault and defended it. The Muqā'is and the Buṭūn [on the other hand] listened but did not comply, except for those with Qays b. ʿAṣīm, for he divided the ʿsadaqah taxes that had been gathered to him among the Muqā'is and the Buṭūn when al-Zibriqān marched with the ʿsadaqah taxes of 'Awf and the Abnā'. 'Awf and the Abnā' were occupied [in fighting] with the Muqā'is and the Buṭūn, but when Qays b. ʿAṣīm saw how al-Ribāb and 'Amr [b. Tamīm] had received al-ʿĀlā', he regretted his earlier hasty actions; whereupon he received al-ʿĀlā' by making ready what he had divided from the ʿsadaqah taxes. He shunned the business he had been involved in [before] and drove [the ʿsadaqah camels] so that they reached him. 896 [Then Qays] went out with (al-Ala') to fight the people of al-Bahrayn. He recited poetry about that, as did al-Zibriqān about his ʿsadaqah tax when he sent it to Abū Bakr. Al-Zibriqān said about that:

I paid in full the several camels [due to] the Apostle, when [other] collectors of ʿsadaqah tax had refused, and not a camel had been returned [to him] by its trustee. 897 Together we defended [the tax] from all the people; the enemy's shooting at [it while it is with] us does not harm it.

So I paid it, in order not to betray my covenant—lean camels, their backs not [yet] broken in for riding.

By doing so I sought piety and the glory of its reputation, [against a time] when the boastful [man] of a company vies with my kind.

In truth I am from a clan which, when their efforts 898 are reckoned, their living and their dead 899 see glory in it.

Neither their young nor their old have been humbled, they are firmly anchored and their breasts are pure.

895. I.e., marched to Abū Bakr.
896. I.e., reached al-ʿĀlā'.
897. Cf. p. 86, above.
898. Sa'yu-hum; Kos has sha'bu-hum, "their people."
899. Lit., "their living and their graves."
I claimed my due from an ungrateful clan;
their barking and mewing did not turn my sword back.
For God, I have entered [the domain] of kings, and many a knight
I speared whenever the cavalry's raiding became intense.

So I broke through their front line\textsuperscript{900} with a bloody thrust, in such a way that he who wished for life injures it.\textsuperscript{901}
Many a spectacle of bravery\textsuperscript{902} have I borne witness to, not idle in it; but today its fate is turned away.
I see my fear of the enemies as [a kind of] daring;
we weep\textsuperscript{903} whenever the inmost thought of the soul is exposed.

Qays said, upon bringing the \textit{sadaqah} tax to al-'Alā':

Send Quraysh a letter from me, you two,
when proofs of the payments have reached them.
Many a time, over the ages, have I brought them to the sides of a well, driving every covetous man of evil conduct to despair [of seizing] them.
I found\textsuperscript{904} that my father and maternal uncle were safe in a plain in which those whom I fended off did not alight.

So al-'Alā' honored him. There\textsuperscript{905} went out with al-'Alā' as many [men] from 'Amr and Sa'd and al-Ribāb as [there were regular troops in] his army. He crossed the Dahna\textsuperscript{906} with us until when we were in the heart of it, with the whistling hills and sighing dunes to the right and left, and God wished to show us his signs. [Al-'Alā'] dismounted and ordered the people to \textsuperscript{900} Lit., "I opened her first one."

\textsuperscript{901} I.e., the one who flees to save his life damages his reputation by fleeing.
\textsuperscript{902} Reading \textit{mashhad sadq} for the text's \textit{mashhad sidq}; cf. Ibn Manẓūr, X, 196, for \textit{sadq} as "bravery." Or, perhaps, something like "moment of truth!"
\textsuperscript{903} Reading with Manuscript C, rather than "he weeps" in the text and Cairo.
\textsuperscript{904} Reading with Cairo, for the text's "I gave generously to . . . ."
\textsuperscript{905} Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 369–70; Isfahānī, XIV, 47; Nuwayri, 101–3.
dismount, whereupon the camels bolted from fright in the depths of the night, so that there remained with us neither camel, nor provisions, nor a water bag, nor a tent, unless he came upon it in the middle of the sands, that [happening] when the army had dismounted but before they had unpacked [the camels]. I have not known a group that was so beset by anxiety as we were, one of us appointing another his executor.

The herald of al-'Alā’ cried out, “Assemble!” So we gathered to him; then he said, “What is this that has appeared among you and overcome you?” Whereupon the people answered, “How can we be blamed, [seeing that] even if we reach the morrow, the sun will not have waxed hot before we will have become [the subject of] a story?” But he replied, “Oh people, do not be afraid. Are you not Muslims? Are you not on the path of God? Are you not the helpers of God?” They said, “Indeed.” He went on, “Then rejoice, for by God, He will not forsake someone in a situation like yours.” The herald called for the morning prayer when the dawn arose, some of us doing our ablutions with sand and others still being in a state of ritual purity. After he had performed his prayer, he assumed a kneeling position and the people kneeled; then he exerted himself in praying, and they with him. Whereupon a mirage of the sun [as if reflecting off water] shimmered for them, so he turned to the row [of people] and said, “A scout to see what this is!” So [the scout] did so; subsequently he returned saying, “[It is] a mirage.” Whereupon he occupied himself [again] with praying. Then it shimmered for them again, but the same thing happened. Then it shimmered for them a final time, whereupon [the scout] said, “Water!” So he got up, and the people got up, and we walked to it until we encamped at it and drank it and washed. The day was not advanced before the camels approached, driven from every 907. I.e., in anticipation of death.

---

908. I.e., before we will have died.
909. Ansār Allāh.
910. Ablutions with sand or dust (tayammum) are permitted when there is insufficient water to do normal ablutions by washing. Those who were still in a state of ritual purity at the morning prayer had, by implication, not slept the night before, as sleep causes the believer to enter the state of lesser impurity, necessitating ablutions before prayer.
side; then they kneeled for us, so each man went to his mount and took it. We had not lost [so much as] a thread. We watered them and made them drink the second drinking after the first drinking, and we watered ourselves; then we left. Abu Hurayrah was my companion, so when we had left that place he said to me, “How [well] do you know the location of that water?” So I replied, “I am one of the best of the Arabs as guides to this country.” He said, “Be with me so that you may bring me straight upon it.” So I came back to it, bringing him to that same place; but lo, there was no pool there, nor any trace of the water. So I said to him, “By God, if I had not seen the water I would have told you that this was the place; I have not seen any drinking water in this place before today.” But lo, there was a small water bag, filled up. Whereupon [Abu Hurayrah] said, “Oh Abu Sahm, this is the place, by God; and for this I returned and brought you back. I filled my water bags, then I placed them on the edge saying [to myself], ‘If this was some act of [divine] grace and a sign [from God] I shall know, and if it was [merely] rainfall I shall know.’ Lo! It is an act of grace!” So he praised God. Then we marched until we came to Hajar. Al-Alā' sent to al-Jarud and to another man to betake themselves to 'Abd al-Qays so that they could attack al-Huṭam from [districts] adjacent to them. (Al-Alā') went out with those who came with him and those who came to him, until he attacked him from what is adjacent to Hajar. All the polytheists gathered to al-Huṭam except the people of Dārin, and all the 911. I.e., although the camels were wandering untended all night, nothing was lost from their baggage.

---

912. Diyarbakri, II, 221 offers a somewhat different miracle story, involving the sudden appearance of rain clouds.
913. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 369, adds “of the pool”; Isfahani, XIV, 47, adds “of the valley.”
914. The text reads ghiyāthan, “divine aid,” but the context of the story clearly requires some test between divine grace and accidental encounter of natural water, the idea being that naturally occurring water would still be there when Abu Hurayrah returned. I suspect that the text originally read ghaythan, “rain,” and have translated accordingly. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 369, has ‘aynan, “a spring,” which in unpointed texts would appear identical with ghaythan. The whole phrase is missing in Isfahani.
Muslims gathered to al-'Alā’ b. al-Ḥaḍramī. The Muslims and the polytheists dug trenches; they used to fight in turns and return to their trench. They were thus for some months. While the people were in that state, one night the Muslims heard a tremendous racket in the camp of the polytheists, like the clamoring of a rout or of fighting; so al-'Alā’ said, “Who will bring us news of the enemy?” Whereupon ‘Abdallāh b. Hadhaf said, “I will bring you news of the enemy.” Now his mother was a woman of 'Ijl, so he went out until, when he drew near their trench, they seized him and said to him, “Who are you?” So he related his genealogy for them, and began calling, “Oh Abjar!” At this, Abjar b. Bujayr came and identified him; then he said, “What is your business?” So [‘Abdallāh] replied, “May I not perish among the Lahāzim!” Why should I be killed while there are all around me troops of 'Ijl, Taymallāt, Qays, and 'Anazah? Is al-Ḥuṭam playing tricks on me, while strangers of the tribes and you are witnesses? Stop it!” He said, “By God, I think you are the worst nephew to your uncles tonight.” So he said, “Let me go and give me something to eat, for I am dying of hunger.” So he brought food for him, whereupon he ate. Then he said, “Give me provisions and a riding camel and let me go to my home.” He said that to a man overcome by drink, who did so. He mounted him on his camel, and gave him provisions, and let him go. ‘Abdallāh b. Hadhaf went out until he entered the camp of the Muslims; then he informed them that the enemy was drunk. So the Muslims went out against them so that they rushed upon their camp, putting them to the sword at will. The enemy rushed into the trench in flight. [Some] were thrown down, [others] escaped; [some stood] dumbfounded, [and were] killed or taken prisoner. The Muslims seized what was in the camp, no man escaping except with what was on him. As for Abjar, he fled; whereas al-Ḫuṭam became confused and mixed up, and his courage left him. So922 he went up to his horse while the Muslims were all around them slaying them, in order to ride it; but when he placed his foot in the stirrup, he was unable to proceed. Then ‘Afīf b. al-Mundhir, one of the Banū ‘Amr b. Tamim, passed him while al-Ḫuṭam was calling for help, saying, “Isn’t there a man of Banū Qays b. Tha’labah who will lift me onto my mount?” Then he raised his voice, so that (‘Afīf) recognized his voice, whereupon he said, “Abū Ḫubay‘ah?” [Al-Ḫuṭam] replied, “Yes.” He said, “Give me your foot so that I may lift you up.” So he gave him his foot so he could lift him, but he struck it from the side [with his sword], severing it from the upper leg, and left him. At this [al-Ḫuṭam] said, “Finish me off!” Whereupon [‘Afīf] replied, “I do not want you to die until I have made you suffer.” Now with ‘Afīf were a number of his father’s offspring; they were killed that night. Al-Ḫuṭam began to say to every Muslim who passed by him in the night, “Would you like to kill al-Ḫuṭam?” saying that even to those he did not know, until Qays b. ‘Āşim passed him. So he said that to him, whereupon [Qays] turned to him and killed him. Then, when he saw that his thigh had been severed,923 he said, “Oh vile one! If I had known what [a wound] he had, I would not have touched him.” After the Muslims had secured the trench against the enemy, they went out in search of them, pursuing them. Qays b. ‘Āсим caught up with Abjar; but Abjar’s horse was stronger than the horse of Qays, so when he feared that he might escape him, he speared him in the hamstring, severing the tendon while the sciatic nerve remained unharmed; so that did it.924 ‘Afīf b. al-Mundhir said,

If the tendon pulses [with the heartbeat] the sciatic nerve does not;

not everyone who falls knows about that.

---

923. So text; i.e., that the lower leg had been severed from it.
924. fa-kānat rāddah.
Did you not see that we subdued their guards in the lineage of 'Amr, and noble al-Ribāb?

'Affif b. al-Mundhir took al-Gharūr b. Suwayd prisoner, so al-Ribāb negotiated with him on his behalf; his father was the nephew of Taym, and they asked him to grant him protection. So he said to al-'Alā', "I have taken this one under my protection." (Al-'Alā') said, "And who is he?" He replied, "Al-Gharūr." (Al-'Alā') said [to al-Gharūr], "You misled these [people]!" (Al-Gharūr) replied, "Oh king, I am not the deceiver [al-gharūr], rather the deceived." (Al-'Alā') said, "Embrace Islam!" So he embraced Islam and remained in Ḥajar. Al-Gharūr was his proper name; it was not a nickname. 'Affif killed al-Mundhir b. Suwayd b. al-Mundhir.

In the morning Al-'Alā' divided the spoils. He awarded some of the men of valor garments as booty; among those who were awarded booty were 'Affif b. al-Mundhir, Qays b. 'Āṣim, and Thumamah b. Uthāl. As for Thumamah, he was given as booty some garments among which was a robe with ornamental borders of which al-Ḥuṭam had been very proud; he sold the garments.

The majority of those who fled headed for Darin, and then rode boats to it; the rest returned to the country of their tribe. So al-'Alā' b. al-Ḥadrami wrote to those among them of Bakr b. Wā'il who had stood by their Islām, and sent to 'Utaybah b. al-Nahhās and to 'Amr b. 'Abd al-Aswād to stick to what they were doing and to waylay the apostates on every road. He ordered Misma to surprise them, and sent to Khaṣafah al-Taymi and al-Muthannā b. Ḥārithah al-Shaybānī, so that they took up positions against them on the road. Some

925. Cf. p. 137, above.
928. A Muslim of Banū 'jl; cf. Ibn Ḥajar, Ḥisākah, s.v.
929. Possibly 'Amr b. al-Aswād b. 'Amir [Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 84]; he is, however, said to have been one of the martyrs at al-Yamāmah.
930. Or "in every way."
of (the fugitives) repented, so (the Muslims) accepted them and included them [in their forces]. Others refused and were stubborn; they were prevented from returning [to Islam], so they went back where they had come from until they crossed over to Dārīn. Thus God gathered them [all] in it. A man of Banū Ḏubay'ah b. Tīl called Wahb said about that, reproaching those of Bakr b. Wā'īl who apostatized:

Do you not see that God tests his creatures so that [some] peoples become wicked even as [another] group becomes pure?

God disgraces peoples afflicted by immorality;

Zayd al-Ḍallāl and Ma'mar fell upon them.933

Al-ʿĀlā’ remained lodged in the camp of the polytheists until the letters came back to him from those of Bakr b. Wā'īl to whom he had written, and he had learned from them of [their] support for God’s cause and zeal934 for His religion. So when he had gotten what he desired from them in this regard, he felt sure that nothing untoward would take him from behind on the part of anyone of the people of al-Baḥrayn. He summoned the people to Dārīn; then he gathered them together and addressed them, saying: “God gathered for you in this sea the troops935 of the devils and those fleeing in fright from the war; He has shown you His signs on land, so that you may consider them on the sea. So arise against your enemy, then cross the sea to them.936 For in truth, God has gathered them.” At this they said, “We shall do it, and by God we shall not feel any fear after [what happened in] the Dahna’ as long as we live.” So he set out and they did likewise until, when they reached the seashore, they plunged in, [mounted upon] whinnying stallions, pack camels, bellowing mules, and braying donkeys, the rider and the infantryman [alike]. (Al-ʿĀlā’) gave a call, and so did they; his call and 933. According to p. 151, below, Zayd and Ma'mar were the killers of al-Ḥuṭam; this, of course, contradicts the account in pp. 144-46, in which 'Afīf b. al-Mundhir and Qays b. 'Āṣim are responsible for al-Ḥuṭam's death.

934. Literally, “passionate anger” [ghadab].
935. Or “companies, parties” [ahlzāb].
936. Lit., “make the sea broad [or ask it to be broad] to them.”
their was, "Oh Most Merciful of forgivers! Oh Noble One! Oh Mild-tempered One! Oh Unique One! Oh Everlasting One! Oh Living One! Oh Reviver of the dead! Oh Living One! Oh Eternal One! There is no God but Thee, oh our Lord!" Then they all passed over that gulf, by the will of God, walking as if on soft sand upon which was water that [only] covered the hooves of the camels. In truth, between the coast and Dārin is a trip of a day and a night for a ship of the sea under some conditions. So they reached it and fought so intensely that they did not leave anyone there to relate [what had happened]. They took as captives the offspring [of the vanquished] and drove off the flocks. The booty of the horseman reached 6,000, and that of the foot soldier 2,000. They crossed over to them and marched on that [same] day; then when they were done, they returned as they had come so that they crossed [back]. About that 'Afif b. al-Mundhir said:

Did you not see that God subdued His ocean, and has sent one of the momentous happenings down among the unbelievers?
We called on Him Who divided the seas, so He brought us something more amazing than the dividing of the first seas.

After al-'Alā' returned to al-Bahrāyn and Islām became established in it, and Islām and its people grew strong and polytheism and its people were abased, those who had something [evil] in their hearts engaged in evil rumors, so the rumor mongers spread their lies. They said, "That one, Mafrūq, has

---

937. The epithets given in the call are all among the Qur'ānic "beautiful names" of God.
938. Cf. Balansi, 143; Diyārbakrī, II, 221, gives a different version of this miraculous crossing.
939. Presumably dirhams, a silver coin.
940. Cairo, without explanation of source, has "they passed the night and marched the next day."
941. Cf. Diyārbakrī, II, 221; Isfahānī, XIV, 49; Balansi, 143.
942. Al-Nu'mān "Mafrūq" b. 'Amr of Banū Abū Rabī'ah of Shāybān of Bakr is said to have died ca. 615 at Yaum al-ʿUzālah (Yawm Iyād), Cf. Caskel, I, Table 149, and II, 451; Balansi, 141, whose editor confirms it to have been Mafrūq b. 'Amr al-Shāybānī. E. Landau-Tasseron suggests that either the person referred to here is a descendant of the deceased Mafrūq, or the narrator uses the name of a gathered his kinsmen of Shayban and Taghlib and al-Namir." But groups of Muslims said to them, "Then the Lahāzim will take care of them for us." Now the Lahāzim at that time had agreed to assist al-'Alā', and they obeyed [him]. About that 'Abdallāh b. Ḥadhaf said:

Do not threaten us with Mafrūq and his family; if he comes to us, he shall suffer among us the fate of al-Ḥuṭām. In truth, that clan of Bakr, even if it is numerous, is [nonetheless] one of the communities entering the fire. Outside the palm grove are horses, and inside it are horses, heavily laden with young men leading camels.

Al-'Alā' b. al-Ḥadrāmī allowed the people to go home, so the people returned, except those who desired to stay. Then we headed home, and Thumāmah b. Uṭāl headed home until, when we were at a spring of the Banū Qays b. Tha'labah, they saw Thumāmah with the robe of al-Ḥuṭām on him; they hid a man with him, saying, "Ask him how [his robe] came to be his, and whether he or someone else killed al-Ḥuṭām." So (the man) came to him and asked him about it, whereupon (Thumāmah) replied, "I was awarded it as booty." (The man) said, "Were you the one who killed al-Ḥuṭām?" He replied, "No, but I wish I had killed him." (The man) asked, "Then how is it that this robe is with you?" He replied, "Didn't I just tell you?" At this (the man) returned to them to tell them [what he had said], so they gathered to him; then they went to (Thumāmah) and surrounded him. Whereupon he said, "What do you want?" They said, "You are the killer of al-Ḥuṭām." (Thumāmah) replied, "You lie; I am not his killer, but I was given it as booty." They said, "Is anyone but the killer awarded the spoil [of a slain man]?" (Thumāmah) dead tribal hero [personal communication]. Cf. Landau-Tasseron, "The Participation of Ṭayyī' in the Ridda," 63, which describes how a hero of the tribe, Zayd al-Khayl, appears in some accounts about the ridda, even though he had died before it began.

943. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 72; Balansi, 141–42, which reverses order of verses 2 and 3.
944. Sunnah. replied, "(The robe) was not on him; it was found in his baggage."
[But] they said, "You lie!" and struck him down.

With the Muslims in Hajar was a monk; then he embraced Islam on that day, so he was asked, "What induced you to embrace Islam?" He replied, "Three things. I feared that God would transform me into something hideous after it if I did not do it; a flood in the sands and the smoothing of the highest parts of the sea; and a prayer that I heard in their camp on the winds by dawn." They said, "What was it?" He said, "Oh God, You are the Compassionate, the Merciful; there is no God other than You; [You are] the Original, nothing was before You; the Enduring, not forgetful; the Living, Who does not die; Creator of what is seen and what is not seen; and each day, You are [employed] in [some] affair; Oh God, You know everything, without learning." Then I knew that a group was not aided by the angels unless they were in God's cause." The companions of the Apostle of God used to listen to that Hajari thereafter.

Al-'Alā' wrote to Abū Bakr, "Now then: God, may He be blessed and exalted, made the Dahna' flow for us in an inundation the western side of which could not be seen. And He showed us a sign and a wonderful example after [our] anxiety and distress, so that we might praise God and glorify Him. So pray to God and ask His assistance for His armies and those who help His religion." So Abū Bakr praised God and prayed to Him, and said: "The Arabs still say, when speaking of their country, that when Luqmān was asked whether they should dig the Dahna' [for water] or leave it, he forbade them and said, 'The well rope does not reach it, and one is not refreshed.' In truth the case of this inundation is one of the great signs; we have not heard of it among any nation before. Oh God, appoint among us a successor to Muḥammad!" Then al-'Alā' wrote to him 947. A reference to the miracles related at pp. 143 and 148, above.

948. Meaning that the pool was so large one could not see across it; the Muslims were, according to the story, coming from the east; cf. p. 143, above.
950. Ikhlīf Muḥammadan finā.
about the defeat of the people of the trench and the killing of al-Huṭam by Zayd and Ma`mar:951 “Now then: God, may His name be blessed, robbed the enemy of their wits and took away their good fortune952 by means of a drink that they took by day; then we rushed upon their trench against them, but found them drunk, so we killed them except for those who fled. Al-Huṭam was killed.” So Abū Bakr wrote [back] to him, “Now then: If you learn anything further about the Banū Shaybān b. Tha`labah like what you have learned [already], and the rumor mongers plunge into it, then send an army to them to crush them, and scatter in flight with them whoever is behind them.” But they did not gather, nor did those rumors of theirs come to anything.

The Apostasy of the People of `Uman and Mahrah and the Yemen

Abū Ja`far said:953 Differences of opinion exist regarding the date of the Muslims’ war [with] these [people]. According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishāq: al-Yamāmah and the Yemen and al-Bahrayn were conquered and the armies sent to Syria in they year 12. According to Abū Zayd—Abū al-Ḥasan al-Madā`ini—Abū Ma`shar, Yazīd b. Iyāḍ b. Ju`dubah, Abū `Ubay-dah b. Muḥammad b. Abī Ḫubaydah, Ghassān b. Abī Ḫāmid, Juwayriyyah b. Asmā’—their teachers according to their chains of authority, and from others among the scholars of the people of Syria and Iraq: The conquests among all the apostates by Khalīd
b. al-Walid and others were in the year 11, except for the affair of Rabi`ah b. Bujayr,954 which was in the year 13. The story of Rabi`ah b. Bujayr al-Taghlibi is that Khalīd b. al-Walid, according to what was said in this account of his which I mentioned, was in al-Muṣayyakh and al-Ḥāṣid;955 then Rabi`ah rose up [in

951. Text has Misma`; but cf. p. 147 and note 933, above. The form Ma`mar must be the correct one because the poem on p. 147 ends in r. Cf. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149; Emendanda.
952. Or “took away their power” (adḥhaba riḥahum).
954. A chief of Taghlib; cf. Tabārī, I, 2072.
955. Two places in southern Iraq conquered by Khalīd b. al-Walid, at which time the uprising of Rabi`ah b. Bujayr occurred. Cf. Ṭabārī I, 2068–2070; Balādhūrī, Futūḥ, 110–11.
The Conquest of Arabia

rebellion) with a group of apostates. So [Khalid] fought him, plundering and taking captives. He gained [as booty] a daughter of Rab'iah b. Bujayr, so he took her captive. He sent the captives to Abū Bakr; subsequently Rab'iah's daughter became the possession of 'Ali b. Abī Ṭālib.

As for the case of 'Umān, according to al-Sarī b. Yahyā—Shu'ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yusuf—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad and al-Ghuṣn b. al-Qāsim and Mūsā al-Jālyūsī—Ibn Muḥayrīz: In 'Umān appeared Laqīṭ b. Mālik al-Azdi, "the one with the crown." During the jāhilīyyah he used to be a rival of al-Julandā, and he preached something like what whoever was a prophet preached. He seized 'Umān as an apostate and forced Jayfar and 'Abbād to take refuge in the mountains and the sea; so Jayfar sent to Abū Bakr informing him about that and asking him [to send] an army against him. At this, Abū Bakr al-Ṣiddiq sent Ḥudhayfah b. Miḥṣan al-Ghalfānī of Himyar and 'Arfajah al-Bāriqi of the Azd, al-Ḥudhayfah to 'Umān and 'Arfajah to Mahrah. He ordered the two of them, when they agreed, to combine against those to whom they had been sent, and to begin in 'Umān, Hudhayfah [having precedence] over 'Arfajah on his front, and 'Arfajah [having precedence] over Ḥudhayfah on his front. So they set out supporting one another. [Abū Bakr] ordered them to march quickly until they should come to 'Umān. Then, when they were near it, they corresponded with Jayfar and 'Abbād and acted on their counsel; so they proceeded to what they had been ordered to. Now Abū Bakr had sent 'Ikrimah against Musaylimah in al-Yamāmah; and he sent Shurahbil b. Hasanah after him, and named al-Yamāmah to him [as his goal]. He commanded the two of them [to proceed] just as he had commanded Ḥudhayfah and 'Arfajah; but 'Ikrimah strove to precede Shurahbil and sought the favor of victory. Then Musaylimah defeated him, so he drew back from Musaylima and wrote to Abū Bakr 958. Text and Cairo have 'Abbād, here and subsequently, Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, has 'Iyādī. The proper form may be 'Abd: cf. p. 70 and note 446, above; Baladhuri, Futūḥ, 76; Caskel, II, 104; Wilkinson, "The Julanda."

959. Balansi, 147, has Ḥudhayfah b. al-Yamān al-Azdi sent by the Prophet.
with the news. Shuraḥbil stood firm where the news reached him. Abū Bakr wrote to Shuraḥbil b. Ḥasanah to remain in the nearest part of al-Yamāmah until his [further] order should come to him, and gave up making him go to the front he had [originally] sent him to. He wrote to Ḥikrimah, censuring him for his excessive haste and saying, ‘I shall neither see you nor hear you until after [some act of] valor. Go to Ḫumān in order to fight the people of Ḫumān; assist Ḥudhayfah and Ḥarfa;ah. Each one of you is in charge of his cavalry; Ḥudhayfah is in charge of the army as long as you are in his district.’ When you have finished, go on to Mahrah; then let your course from it be to the Yemen until you meet up with al-Muhājir b. Abū Umayyah in the Yemen and in Ḥadramawt. Crush whoever has apostatized between Ḫumān and the Yemen. Let me learn of your valor.’ So Ḥikrimah proceeded on the heels of Ḥarfa;ah and Ḥudhayfah, leading those who were with him, so that he joined the two of them before they had reached Ḫumān. He had made an agreement with them that, after finishing, they would follow the opinion of Ḥikrimah in marching on with him or staying in Ḫumān. Then, after they had joined [forces] and were near Ḫumān in a place called Rijām, they corresponded with Jayfar and Ābbād. Laqīṭ learned of the approach of the army, so he gathered his troops and set up camp at Dabā. Jayfar and Ābbād came out of the places where they had been and set up camp at Ṣuhār. The two of them sent to Ḥudhayfah, Ḥarfa;ah, and Ḥikrimah [inviting them] to come to them; so they came to them both in Ṣuhār. Then they mopped up those who adjoined them until they were satisfied with [the loyalty of] those who were near them. They wrote to chiefs who were with Laqīṭ, starting with a chief of Banū Judayd; they exchanged cor-

960. fi ʾamalīthi.
961. Presumably Abū Bakr imposing an agreement on the three commanders, Ḥarfa;ah, Ḥudhayfah, and Ḥikrimah; the pronoun “them” is plural, not dual.
962. I.e., on to Mahrah and the Yemen. The text hereabouts is not always lucid.
963. A long red mountain on the western fringe of Ḫumān: cf. Thilo, s.v.
964. A seaport and sometimes capital of Ḫumān, where a Sasanian garrison was stationed on the eve of Islam: cf. Yāqūt, s.v.; Wilkinson, “The Ḫulanda,” 99.
965. Probably Judayd b. Ḥadīr, a large subdivision of the Ḫumāni tribe of Daws—Azd.
respondence until they became dispersed from him. They fell upon Laqīṭ, meeting [him] at Dabā. Laqīṭ had gathered the families and then put them behind their lines to provoke them to battle and to protect their womenfolk. Now Dabā is the chief town (miṣr) and the most important marketplace. So they fought intensely at Dabā. Laqīṭ was prevailing over the army; but while they were in that situation, the Muslims having experienced disorder and the polytheists anticipating victory, there came to the Muslims their great reinforcements from Banū Najiyāh, led by al-Khirrīt b. Rāshid, and from 'Abd al-Qays, led by Sayḥān b. Ṣuhān, and scattered individuals of 'Uman from Banū Najiyāh and 'Abd al-Qays. Thus God strengthened the people of Islam through them, and weakened through them the polytheists; so the polytheists turned their backs in flight, so that 10,000 of them were killed in the battle. (The Muslims) pursued them so that they made great slaughter among them and took the offspring prisoner and divided the flocks among the Muslims. They sent the fifth [of booty] to Abū Bakr with 'Arfajah. 'Ikrimah and Hudhayfah were of the opinion that Hudhayfah should remain in 'Uman so as to facilitate matters and to calm the people down. The fifth [of booty] amounted to 800 heads; and they plundered the marketplace completely. So 'Arfajah marched to Abū Bakr with the fifth of the captives and the plunder, while Hudhayfah remained to calm the people down. He invited the tribes around 'Uman to settle what God had restored as booty to the Muslims and the expatriates of 'Uman. 'Ikrimah marched on with the people; he started with Mahrah, about which Abbād al-Nājī said:

966. A branch of the old Quḍā‘ī tribe of Jarm that had, before Islam, taken up independent residence in 'Uman. Cf. Caskel, II, 442.
969. Or “property” (amwāl).
970. Balansi, 149, says 700 captives, with Hudhayfah conducting them to Medina while 'Ikrimah remained in Dabā.
971. I.e., 800 people captured! Or 800 head of livestock?
972. Shawādhīb (sing. shādhīb), “those separated from their homeland.”
By my life, Laqīt b. Mālik was met by an evil that would make foxes shamefaced.
He challenged in battle Abū Bakr and those who praise [God], whereupon there were thrown down two strands of his mighty torrent.
The first one did not thwart him, and the enemies were not defeated;
but then his cavalry took away the straying camels.

The Account of Mahrah in the Uplands

After 974 'Ikrimah and 'Arfajah and Hudhayfah had finished with the apostasy of 'Uman, 'Ikrimah went out with his army toward Mahrah. He asked those around 'Uman and the people of 'Uman for assistance, and marched until he reached Mahrah, with men of Nājiyyah, al-Azd, 'Abd al-Qays, Rāsib,975 and Sa'd of Banū Tamim976 whom he had asked to help him, until he fell upon the territories of Mahrah. He met in [that country] two groups977 of Mahrah. The first of them was in a place of the land of Mahrah called Jayrut;978 that region had been filled up as far as Naḍadūn, [Jayrut and Naḍadūn being] two of the plains of Mahrah. They were led by Shakhrīt,979 a man of Banū Shakrat. As for the other [group], they were in the uplands. Now all of Mahrah had obeyed the leader of this group, which was led by al-

---

973. Al-najd.
975. A branch of Jarm, which like Nājiyyah had settled in 'Uman before Islām. Cf. Caskel, II, 211, 259, s.v. "Garm"; 485.
976. Sa'd min bani Tamim. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149 felt that text should read simply "Sa'd Tamim," [i.e., referring to Sa'd b. Zaydmanāt b. Tamim]; in the Emendanda, De Goeje proposed that the text should read simply "Sa'd" [referring to Sa'd Hudhaym] and that min bani Tamim should be dropped. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 373, has, in fact, only "Sa'd," and also omits mention of al-Azd.
977. Here and elsewhere in the paragraph, jām', lit., "gathering," refers to a military force, particularly one of bedouins.
978. Neither Jayrut nor the next toponym, Naḍadūn, are known to Hamdānī; Yāqūt's information about them is derived from this account and so adds nothing.
Muṣabbah, one of the Banū Muḥarib, and all the people were with him except those who were with Shakhrit. So the two of them were in disagreement, each one of the two chiefs calling upon the other to [support] him, and each one of the two armies desiring that victory should be to their chief. That was how God helped the Muslims and strengthened them against their enemy, and weakened [the enemy].

Now when 'Ikrimah saw how few were those with Shakhrit, he invited him to return to Islām. It was at the beginning of the call, so (Shakhrit) responded to him; in this way God weakened al-Muṣabbah. Then ('Ikrimah) sent to al-Muṣabbah inviting him to Islām and to return from his unbelief; but he was deceived by how many there were with him, and moved further away because of Shakhrit’s situation. So 'Ikrimah marched against him, and Shakhrit marched with him; then they and al-Muṣabbah met in the uplands, and fought more intensely than the fighting at Dabā. Then God put the armies of the apostates to flight and killed their leader. The Muslims pursued them, so that they killed of them what they wished and seized [as captives] what they wished. Among what they seized [as captives] were 2,000 noblewomen. Then 'Ikrimah set aside the fifth of the booty and sent the fifth with Shakhrit to Abū Bakr, and divided the [remaining] four-fifths among the Muslims. 'Ikrimah and his army grew stronger through the camels and goods and weapons [taken as booty]. 'Ikrimah remained so that he could muster them for whatever [purpose] he wished. The people of the Najd congregated—the people of Riyāḍ al-Rawdah, the people of the seacoast, the people of the 980. Several tribes with this name exist, most notably a branch of 'Abd al-Qays in al-Bahrain, also bearing this name are branches of Quraysh, Qays (both Hijāz tribes) and 'Anazah (of northeastern Arabia).

981. I.e., the beginning of the period when Islām was preached to the tribes of Arabia by the Muslims.
982. That is, since Shakhrit had joined Islām, his rival al-Muṣabbah distanced himself from it.
983. During the riddah and Islamic conquests, the one-fifth share of booty that in pre-Islamic times had been the share of the raid leader was set aside for the caliph to use for the good of the Muslim community.
984. Thus Yaqūt; text has “Riyāḍat al-Rawdah.” Cf. Emendanda and pp. 177–79, below.
islands, the people of [the lands of] myrrh and frankincense,\textsuperscript{985} the people of Jayrūt, Zuhūr al-Shīhr, al-Ṣabarāt, Yanʿāb, and Dhāt al-Khiyam\textsuperscript{986}—to take the oath of allegiance to Islām. Then he wrote about that with a herald—he was al-Sāʿīb, one of the Banū ʾAbīd of Makhzūm—so he came to Abū Bakr with [news of] the conquest, and Shakhrit arrived after him with the fifths [of booty] the conquest. About that ʿUljūm al-Muḥārībī said:

May God punish Shakhrit and the splinter groups of Haysham and Firdīm,\textsuperscript{987} since groups from every quarter came to us.

A punishment deserved, [for] he had taken no heed of protection,\textsuperscript{988} and he did not hope for it in the way that relatives do.

Oh ʿIkrimah, but for the gathering of my tribe and their deeds, indeed the places [where you could go] would have seemed confining to you.

We would have been like someone who lets a palm [of one hand] follow its mate;\textsuperscript{989} the vicissitudes [of fate] would have descended upon us in time.

\textsuperscript{985} Or “the people of al-Murr/al-Marr and Labbān.” Text and Yāqūt have “al-Labbān.” However, neither Hamdānī nor Yāqūt know of a place called al-Murr/al-Marr, and Yāqūt’s entry for “al-Labbān” simply notes that it is in Mahrah and mentioned in the riddah, so his information is probably derived from this very account. The Mahrah and Ḫadramawt districts were, of course, well known as sources of myrrh (al-murr) and frankincense (al-lubdān).

\textsuperscript{986} The four preceding toponyms are known to Yāqūt only as “places in the Mahrah mentioned during the riddah”; presumably, he got his information on them from this account.

\textsuperscript{987} Firdīm b. al-ʿUjayl was, according to Ibn al-Kalbi, from Mahrah (Caskel I, Table 328 and II, 247). Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 149, proposes to read “Qirdīm”; authorities are divided.

\textsuperscript{988} Lam yurāqib li-dhimmatin. Cf. the phrase là yarqubu fihi illan wa-lā dhimmatan, “he treated him ruthlessly”; Hans Wehr, A Dictionary of Modern Arabic, 352. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 373, has “took no heed of his religion [li-dinī];” Presumably the verse refers to Shakhrit’s betrayal of his tribe, Mahrah.

\textsuperscript{989} I.e., we would have wrung our hands?
Account of the Apostates in the Yemen

Abū Ja'far said: according to al-Sarī b. Yahyā—Shu'ayb—Sayf—Tālhāh—‘Ikrimah and Sahl—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad. The Apostle of God died while over Mecca and its territory were ‘Attāb b. Asīd and al-Ṭāhir b. Abī Hālah, ‘Attāb over Banū Kinānah and al-Ṭāhir over ‘Akk. That was [because] the Prophet had said, “Put the governorship of ‘Akk among the descendants of his ancestor Ma‘add b. ‘Adnān.” Over al-Ṭā‘if and its territory were ‘Uthmān b. Abī al-‘Ās and Mālik b. ‘Awf al-Naṣrī, ‘Uthmān over the settled people and Mālik over the nomads, the hinder parts of Hawāzin. Over Najrān and its territory were ‘Amr b. Ḥazm and Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb, ‘Amr b. Ḥazm over prayer and Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb over the sadqah taxes. Over [the territory] between Rima’ and Zabid as far as the border of Najrān was Khālid b. Sa‘īd b. al-‘Āṣ. Over all of Ḥamdān was ‘Āmir b. Shahr, and over Ṣan‘ā’ was Fayruz al-Daylami, supported by Dādhawayh and Qays b. Makshūḥ. Over al-Janad was Ya‘lā b. Umayyah, and over Ma‘rib was Abū Mūsā al-Asbā‘ī. Over the Ash‘aris in addition to ‘Akk was al-Ṭāhir b. Abī Hālah. Mu‘ādh b. Jabal used to instruct the people, making the rounds in the district of every governor.

Then al-Aswād sprang upon them during the life of the Prophet, so the Prophet waged war against him by means of

991. An Umayyad and late convert to Islam who had been appointed governor of Mecca by the Prophet. Cf. ET2, s.v. “‘Attāb b. Asīd.”
993. Ma‘add was the supposed ancestor of all North Arabs. Cf. ET2, s.v. “Ma‘add” [A. Grohmann—G. R. Smith].
994. A member of the tribe of Thaqīf of al-Ṭā‘if, he converted late, just before the Prophet's conquest of his city; he was earnest in teaching the Qurān. Cf. Caskel, II, 579; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, III, 274–76.
996. A‘jāz Hawāzin.
997. Abū Sufyān, father of the Umayyad caliph Mu‘āwiyyah, was head of the Umayyad clan of Quraysh at the time of the Prophet; he opposed the Prophet until his conversion to Islam just before the conquest of Mecca. Cf. ET2, s.v. “Abū Sufyān b. Ḥarb” [W. M. Watt].
998. Fi ‘amali kulli ‘āmilin.
envoys and letters until God killed him and the cause of the Prophet returned to what it had been one night before the Prophet's death. However, the arrival [of the Prophet's commanders in Yemen] did not stir up the people since the people were prepared for it. Then, when [news of] the death of the Prophet reached them, the Yemen and the countries rebelled. The horsemen of al-'Anṣi had been in a commotion in [the country] between Najrān and Ṣanʿā' on the side of that sea, not taking refuge with anyone nor anyone taking refuge with them.

So 'Amr b. Ma'dikarib [was] opposite Farwah b. Musayk, and Mu'awiyah b. Anas [was] leading the fugitive soldiers of al-'Anṣi, wavering. None of the governors of the Prophet returned [to Medina] after the death of the Prophet, except 'Amr b. Ḥazm and Khālid b. Sa'id. The rest of the governors took refuge among the Muslims. 'Amr b. Ma'dikarib confronted Khālid b. Sa'id, so he seized as booty from him [Amr's sword] "The Persistent." The messengers returned bearing the news, and Jarīr b. 'Abdallah and al Agra` b. Abdallah and Wabr b. Yuhannis came back. So until such time as Usāmah b. Ṣayd returned from Syria—that was estimated at three months—Abū Bakr waged war against all the apostates [only] by means of envoys and letters, just as the Apostle of God had done, except for the affairs of the people of Dhu Ḥusā and Dhu al-Qaṣṣah.

Then the first clash upon the return of Usāmah was this. So

---

999. Cf. pp. 33 and 38, above. The text is problematic; Wellhausen, (Skizzen, VI, 149–50) and De Goeje [Emendanda] disagree on rendering and reading. I have followed De Goeje.

1000. I.e., the surrounding districts [al-buldān].

1001. Of the Murād group of the tribe of Madhhāj, he came to the Prophet at the end of the latter's life and was sent by him over Madhhāj, cf. Caskel, II, 245; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, IV, 180–81.

1002. Of the tribe of Sulaym; cf. Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣābah s.v.

1005. Of Ḥimyar, sent by the Prophet to Dhū Ṭumān. Cf. Ibn Ḥajar, Iṣābah, s.v.

1006. In these two instances, Abū Bakr resorted to military confrontation; cf. pp. 40ff., above.

1007. I.e., Dhū al-Qaṣṣah. Cairo, following Kosegarten, reads "the first people to clash ... were they."
he went out to al-Abraq. He did not face a tribe directly to defeat them; rather, he incited those among them who had not apostatized against the others. So, with a group of the Muhājirūn and the Ansār and those who had been aroused among the non-apostates, [Abū Bakr] vanquished those [rebels] who were close to them, until he took care of the last of the business of the army, without asking the [former] apostates for help [against the remaining rebels]. The first who wrote to him was 'Attāb b. Asid; he wrote to him about the pursuit of those who had stood firm in Islam by those in his governorship who had apostatized, while 'Utbān b. Abī l-Āṣ [wrote] of the pursuit of those who had stood firm in Islam by those who had apostatized among the people in his governorship. As for 'Attāb, he sent Khālid b. Asid against the people of the Tihāmah, for there had gathered in it groups from Mudlij; and there congregated to them scattered persons from Khuza‘ah and splinter groups from Kinānah, commanded by Jundab b. Sulmā, one of the Banū Shānuq of Banū Mudlij. In the governorship (‘amal) of ‘Attāb there was no gathering besides this, so they met at al-Abārīq, whereupon [Khālid b. Asid] dispersed them and killed them. The slaughter was great among the Banū Shānuq, so that they remained weak and few in number [after that]. The governorship of ‘Attāb became free [of rebels], and Jundab escaped. Then Jundab said about that: 1008. Äkhirī ʿumūr al-nāṣ, i.e., the last rebels opposing the Muslims. The sentence is difficult; cf. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 150; Emendanda.

---

1009. ‘Attāb’s brother; he embraced Islam at the time of the conquest of Mecca and was one of those Meccans given special favors by the Prophet in order to win them over; they were called those “whose hearts were reconciled.” Cf. Caskel, II, 341; Ibn al-Athīr, Usd, II, 76.

1010. An old tribe living between Mecca and Medina, formerly dominant in Mecca before being displaced by Quraysh. Cf. EI², s.v. “Khuza‘a” (M. J. Kister), Caskel, II, 350.

1011. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 374, has Salmā.

1012. Shānuq b. Murrah, a section of Kinānah, was, according to Ibn al-Kalbi, not part of Mudlij b. Murrah, but rather a lateral affiliate. Cf. Caskel, I, Table 44, and II, 416 and 526. The conflation may have been introduced to explain the verses below.

1013. ‘Umdlah.
I repented and knew with certainty in the morning that I had come to something the disgrace of which remains on a man.

I bear witness that there is nothing beside God.

Banū Mudlijj, God is my Lord and my Protector.1014

‘Uthmān b. Abī al-‘Āṣ sent a force against Shanū‘āh.1015 There had gathered in it groups of Azd and Bajilah and Khath‘am,1016 led by Ḫumaydāh b. al-Nu‘mān.1017 In charge of the people of al-Ṭā‘if was ‘Uthmān b. Rabī‘ah.1018 So they met in Shanū‘āh; then they routed those groups and they dispersed from Ḫumaydāh. Ḫumaydāh fled into the countryside, whereupon ‘Uthmān b. Rabī‘ah said about that:

We broke up their groups while the pool filled with dust, and the niggardly clouds may promise relief deceitfully.

A lightning-cloud1019 flashed when we met, then those flashings returned as rainless clouds.

The Wicked People of ‘Akk

Abū Ja‘far said:1020 The first rebellion in the Tihamah after the [death of the] Prophet was [that of] ‘Akk and the Ash‘aris. [The story of] that was that, when the death of the Prophet reached them, scattered remnants of them gathered; then scattered remnants and large groupings1021 from the Ash‘aris 1014. Reading jāriyā with Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 150 and Emendanda, against jāru-hā, “its Protector” in the text and Cairo.

---

1016. All three were tribes of the Sarāt region [modern ‘Asir] of southwest Arabia; Khath‘am was closely associated with Bajilah. Cf. El², s.v. “Azd” [G. Strenziok], “Badjila” [W. M. Watt], and “Khath‘am” [G. Levi della Vida].

1017. Cf. Tabarī, I, 2218: a Bāriqī [of Azd].

1018. According to Ibn al-Athīr, Uṣd, III, 371, he was from Quraysh and among the emigrants to Abyssinia; according to Caskel, I, Table 115 and II, 579, he was of Hawāzīn.

1019. Bāriq; perhaps “sword.” In either case, evidently a pun on the name of Ḫumaydāh’s clan, Bāriq.

1021. Reading khādamm with Emendanda, against khaddāma in text and Cairo; cf. Ibn Manẓūr, XII, 83. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 150 proposed ḥakam. Cf. also Caetani, 582.
came to them, so they joined with them. Then they remained on al-A`lab,\textsuperscript{1022} the coastal road. Parties of men under no leader congregated to them. So al-\Ṭāhir b. Abī Hālah wrote about this to Abū Bakr, and marched against them, writing also about his marching against them—with him was Masrūq al-\'Akkī\textsuperscript{1023}—until he came to those parties of men on al-A`lab; then they met and fought, whereupon God routed them. They slaughtered them by every means; the roads stank because of their slaughter. Their killing was a great conquest.

Abū Bakr responded to al-\Ṭāhir before [al-\Ṭāhir's] letter about the conquest could come to him: “Your letter has reached me, in which you inform me that you have marched against the wicked people in al-A`lab and that you have asked Masrūq and his tribe for assistance. You are right, so hurry [to deliver] this blow; do not deal gently with them. Occupy al-A`lab until the road of the wicked people should become secure and [until] my order should reach you.” So those groups of Akk and those who congregated to them have been called to this day “the wicked people,” and that road has been called “the road of the wicked people.” Al-\Ṭāhir b. Abī Hālah said about that:

By God, if not for God, other than Whom there is no thing, the \‘Athā’ith\textsuperscript{1024} would not have been dispersed in the rugged hills.

My eye had never seen a day like the one I saw beside the sweat of horses among the groupings of the wicked people.

\textbf{We slew them from the hilltop of Khāmir\textsuperscript{1025} as far as the red sodden plains strewn with mud dredged from wells.\textsuperscript{1026}}

\begin{footnotes}
\textsuperscript{1022} Yāqūt knows this as a toponym, but evidently gets his information solely from this account. Cf. Ibn Manẓūr, I, 627, which defines \textit{\'ilb} as “barren place.”
\textsuperscript{1023} Cf. Wathimah, 31/74, which has “Masrūq b. Dhi al-\ھرب al-Hamdānī al-\آربābī.”
\textsuperscript{1024} Possibly a nickname applied to the Shahrān, an important lineage of the tribe of Khath’am, because several of their chiefs bore the name \‘Ath’āth. Cf. Caskel, II, 205; Ibn Manẓūr, II, 168 left.
\textsuperscript{1025} A mountain in the \‘Akk country, according to Yāqūt, s.v.
\textsuperscript{1026} Yāqūt, s.v. “Khāmir,” reads “having \‘Athā’ith.”
\end{footnotes}
We seized as booty the flocks of the wicked ones by force, fighting openly; we took no heed of the din of battle.

Tahir encamped on the "road of the wicked ones," along with Masrūq leading 'Akk, awaiting Abū Bakr's order.

Abū Ja'far said:1027 When the [news of the] death of the Apostle of God reached the people of Najrān—they were at that time 40,000 fighting men of Banū al-Af'ā,1028 the community who were in (Najrān) before Banū al-Ḥārith1029—they sent a delegation [to Abū Bakr] to renew the pact. So they came to him, whereupon he wrote for them:

In the name of God, the Merciful, the Compassionate: this is a document from the servant of God, Abū Bakr, successor of the Apostle of God, to the people of Najrān. He affords them protection from his army and himself, and decrees for them the protection1030 of Muḥammad, except that which Muḥammad the Apostle of God had revoked on God's command regarding their lands and the lands of the Arabs, that two religions should not dwell in them. Thereafter he gave them protection for their persons, their communities, the rest of their properties,1031 their dependents, their horses,1032 those absent of them and those present, their bishop and their monks and their churches wherever they might be; and for what their hands possess whether little or much. They owe what is incumbent upon them; if they pay it, they will not be compelled to emigrate, nor tithed, nor shall a bishop be changed from his bishopric or a monk from his monastic life. He shall fulfil for them everything that the Apostle of God granted them in 1029. Banū al-Ḥārith b. Ka'b [Bal-Ḥārith] was a tribe of the Najrān area allied to Madhhij; they had negotiated with the Prophet, but later backed al-Aswad. Cf. EI², s.v. "al-Ḥārith b. Ka'b" [J. Schleifer], Caskel, II, 308.

---

1030. Dhimmah.
1031. Possibly "flocks": amwāl.
1032. Possibly simply "troops": 'ādiyyah.
writing, and everything that is in this document by way of the protection of Muhammad, the Apostle of God, and the covenant of the Muslims. They owe [the Muslims] advice and righteousness in those just duties that are incumbent upon them. Al-Miswar b. 'Amr and 'Amr, the client of Abu Bakr, were witnesses [to this agreement].

Abū Bakr sent Jarīr b. 'Abdallāh back and ordered him to summon those from his tribe who had remained firm in the cause of God, and then to ask those who could reinforce them for help, so as to fight with them those who had turned away from the cause of God. He ordered him to come to Khath'am so that he could fight those who rebelled out of zealous attachment to Dhū al-Khalāṣah and those who wished to restore it [as their deity], until God should kill them and those who participated with them in that. Then he was to direct himself toward Najrān, to remain in it until [Abū Bakr's] orders should reach him. So Jarīr went out, carrying out that which Abū Bakr had commanded him to do. No one opposed him except some men leading a small number [of followers]; so he killed them and pursued them. Then he directed himself to Najrān, and resided in it awaiting the order of Abū Bakr.

(Abū Bakr) wrote to 'Uthmān b. Abī al-'Āṣ to impose on the people of al-Ṭa'īf [the raising of] an army, each district [contributing] according to its ability, and to put in command over them a man in whom he had confidence and whose intentions he trusted. So he imposed twenty men [as a contribution] on each district, and put his brother in command of them. (Abū Bakr) wrote to 'Attāb b. Asid to impose on the... people of Mecca and its district 500 reinforcements, and to send over them a man in whom he had confidence. So he named those whom he would send and put Khālid b. Asid in command of them. He appointed the commander of each tribe, and they stood at the ready for Abū Bakr’s order to reach them and for al-Muhājir to come to them.

Apostasy of the People of the Yemen a Second Time

Abū Ja`far said: Among those of them who apostatized a second time was Qays b. 'Abd Yaghūth b. Makshūh. 1038

According to al-Sarī—Shu`ayb—Sayf: 1039 The story of Qays in his second apostasy was that when the news of the Apostle of God’s death came to them, [the pact] was violated and he worked for the killing of Fayruz and Dādhawayh and Jushaysh. Abū Bakr wrote to ‘Umayr Dhū Murrān and to Sa‘īd Dhū Zūd and to Samayfa’ Dhū al-Kalā’ and to Ḥawshab Dhū Zulaym and to Shahr Dhū Yanāf, 1040 ordering them to stick to their position 1041 and to undertake the cause of God and of the people, and promising them soldiers: “From Abū Bakr, successor of the Apostle of God, to ‘Umayr b. Aflah Dhū Murrān, Sa‘īd b. al-‘Āqib Dhū Zūd, Samayfa’ b. Nākūr Dhū al-Kalā’, Ḥawshab Dhū Zulaym, and Shahr Dhū Yanāf. Now then: assist the Abnā’ against whosoever opposes them, defend them, and obey Fayruz and apply your utmost effort with him, for I have appointed him [governor].”

According to al-Sarī—Shu`ayb—Sayf—al-Mustanir b. Yazīd—‘Urwah b. Ghaziyyah al-Dathīnī: 1042 After Abū Bakr was appointed, he put Fayruz in command. Before that, they had relied upon one another—[Fayruz] and Dādhawayh and Jushaysh and Qays. 1043 He wrote to some of the chiefs of the people of the 1038. On his name, see note 145, above.

---

1040. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 376 has “Dhū Niyāf.” On these “Dhūs” see p. 27 and note 168, above.
1041. Lit., “to stick to that in which they were,” i.e., to stand fast in Islam.
1043. I.e., no one had been in overall command, each leader being equal and supporting the others as need required.
Yemen. When Qays heard about that, he wrote to Dhū al-Kalāʾ and his companions, “The Abnāʾ are interlopers in your country and foreigners among you. Even if you leave them, they will not cease to be against you. I have come to hold the opinion that I should murder their chiefs and expel them from our country.” But they declared themselves clear [of the matter], such that they did not conspire with him nor assist the Abnāʾ, but kept aloof, saying, “We have nothing to do with this. You are their responsibility and they are your responsibility.” So Qays lay in wait for them and prepared to kill their chiefs and to expel their common [followers]. Then Qays corresponded with those defeated Lahji troops who were roaming about, while they were going up and down through the country, waging war against all who opposed them. Qays corresponded with them in secret and ordered them to hurry to him, [proposing] that his cause and their cause should be one and that they should unite in exiling the Abnāʾ from the lands of the Yemen. So they wrote [back] to him responding [favorably] to him, and informed him that they were hastening to him. The people of Ṣanʿāʾ were taken by surprise, [learning of it] only with the news of their drawing near it. Then Qays came to Fayruz about that, as though he were terrified of this news, and came to Dādhawayh and consulted the two of them in order to confuse them so that they would not suspect him; so they took that into consideration and had confidence in him. Then Qays invited them to a meal the next day, starting with Dādhawayh, and [asking] Fayruz next and [1991] Jushaysh [after him]. So Dādhawayh went out to call on (Qays); but when he did so, (Qays) fell upon him quickly and killed him. Fayruz went out to go [to Qays also] until, when he was drawing near, he overheard two women talking between the rooftops. One of them said, “This one will be killed just as Dādhawayh was killed.” So he met the two of them; then he turned aside until he could see the people, high up, gathered together. [When] 1044. Lit., “You are their companion...” etc. The idea is that Qays and the Abnāʾ must settle their relationship themselves.

1045. Lit., “Nothing took the people of Ṣanʿāʾ by surprise except the news of their drawing near it.”
1046. Cf. Ibn Ḥubaysh, 77; he says Fayruz escaped to Abū Bakr.
they were told of Fayruz’s turning back, they went out running [in pursuit]. Fayruz ran to meet Jushaysh, whereupon he went out with him heading toward the mountain of Khawlân,1047 for they were the maternal relatives of Fayruz. The two of them preceded the horsemen to the mountain. Then the two of them climbed down and up the mountain, wearing only plain boots, so that their feet were cut before they arrived. They reached Khawlân, and Fayruz entrenched himself among his maternal relatives and swore not to wear plain boots. The horsemen returned to Qays. Then he rose in rebellion in Ṣanʿā’ and occupied it, and collected what was around it, playing for time.1048 The horsemen of al-Aswad came to him. Now after Fayruz had taken refuge with his maternal kinsmen of Khawlân, so that they guarded him and the people flocked to him, he wrote to Abū Bakr with the news. Then Qays said, “What is Khawlân, and what is Fayruz, and in what abode have they taken refuge?” The common people of the tribes to whose leaders Abu Bakr had written sided with Qays, whereas the leaders remained withdrawn.1049 Qays sought out the Abnā’, dividing them into three subdivisions. Those who remained he safeguarded, and their families he safeguarded.1050 The families of those who had fled to Fayruz he divided into two groups; one of them he sent to Aden so that they could be carried [away] by sea, and the other was carried away by land. To all of them he said, “Go to your country!” With them he sent someone to make them go. The family of al-Daylamī was among those who were made to go away by land; the family of Dādhawayh were among those who were made to go away by sea. So when Fayruz saw that the majority of the people of the Yemen had gathered to Qays, and that the families had been marched [into exile], and [that] he had exposed them to plunder, and [that] he had not found any way to separate himself from his camp in order to save them, and when [Fayruz] learned what Qays had said out of contempt for him
[and for his] maternal relatives and the Abnā', he said, by way of tracing his lineage and boasting, and mentioning the departure on a desert voyage.\textsuperscript{1051}

Call, you two, for the departure of a woman to the palm-filled sands, and speak to her, so that there would be no blame on me.
What the enemies say did not harm them, even if they said much;
he came to his tribe with neither excess nor stinginess.
So desist from a woman on the road that is stretched out toward the object of her desire, as the sands seek the sands.
Even if, indeed, our residence was in Șan'ā', ours are the offspring of a tribe from whose noble chiefs my offspring are.
In truth, strong and stubborn Daylam, after hardship, refused the life of ease and chose the heat over shade.
Most of the lush places of Iraq belonged to my close kin, when the cooking pots of Kisrā were boiling.\textsuperscript{1052}
My lineage [I trace to] a brave one; no matter how much I have grown, my station [in life] is just like the end of every stick, at the root.

Our glory is not from the ignorance\textsuperscript{1053} of those of enmity;
God insisted on being glorious despite ignorance.
(The enemy) did not divert us in times of peace from the family of Aḥmad,\textsuperscript{1054} nor did they detract from Islām since they embraced Islām before me.
And if a bucketful of [the deeds of] my tribe had sprinkled me,
I would want my bucketful to drown them.

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{1051} The departure on a desert voyage (zu'n) is a common part of the classical qaṣīda or ode.
\item \textsuperscript{1052} I.e., in the heyday of Kisrā.
\item \textsuperscript{1053} Or "barbarity, coarseness": jahl.
\item \textsuperscript{1054} I.e., from Islām; Aḥmad = Muḥammad.
\end{itemize}
Fayruz continued in his war and devoted himself to it. He sent a messenger to the Banu 'Uqayl b. [Ka'b b.] Rabia b. 'Amir b. Sa'sa'ah \(^{1055}\) informing them that he was taking refuge with them and asking them for reinforcements and assistance in bearing down on those who were disturbing the households of the Abna'. And he sent a messenger to Akk, asking them for reinforcements and assistance against those who were disturbing the households of the Abna'. So 'Uqayl mounted—they were led by a man of the allies called Mu'awiyyah—so that they confronted the cavalry of Qays and then rescued those families. They killed those who were making them march into exile and barred them from the villages until Fayruz returned to San'a'. 'Akk, led by Masrur, sprang up to march until they rescued the families of the Abna', and barred them \(^{1056}\) from the villages until Fayruz returned to San'a'. 'Uqayl and 'Akk reinforced Fayruz with men. After their reinforcements reached him among those who had gathered to him, he went out at the head of those who had congregated to him and those who had reinforced him from 'Akk and 'Uqayl; then he clashed with Qays, so that they met before San'a'. Then they fought, whereupon God routed Qays at the head of his tribe and those who had risen up. So he departed in flight with his army until he returned with them; they returned to the place in which they had hurried when they fled after the murder of al-'Ansi. Qays was in command of them. The faction of al-'Ansi, and Qays with them, were in a commotion between San'a' and Najran. 'Amr b. Ma'dikarib was facing Farwah b. Musayk in obedience to al-'Ansi.

According to al-Sari—Shu'ayb—Sayf—'Atiyyah—'Amr b. Salamah: \(^{1057}\) Part of the affair of Farwah b. Musayk was that he had come to the Apostle of God as a Muslim. About that he said:

---

\(^{1056}\) Presumably referring to those who had been marching the Abna' families into exile, but who are not mentioned in this sentence as they are in the preceding one. It seems probable that this repeat of the earlier phrase constitutes a dittography, rather than part of Tabari's original text.

When I saw the kings of Himyar, they shied away like the leg whose sciatic nerve betrayed it.\textsuperscript{1058}
I steered my she-camel before Muḥammad;
I desire benefits and good praise for her.

Among the things the Apostle of God said to him was, "Did what befell your tribe on the day of al-Razm displease you, oh Farwah, or please you?" He replied, "Anyone whose tribe was afflicted as much as my tribe was afflicted on the day of al-Razm would dislike that." (Now the day of al-Razm was [a battle] between (Murād) and the Hamdān over Yaghūth, an idol that was sometimes with the former and sometimes with the latter. Then Murād desired to take sole control of it from (Hamdān) during their time; but Hamdān slaughtered them and their chief, al-Ajda', the father of Masrūq.) So the Apostle of God said, "Indeed, that only increased their good standing in Islām." Whereupon (Farwah) replied, "It would please me if that were [so]." So the Apostle of God appointed him over the ṣadaqah taxes of Murād and whoever resided with them or dwelt in their territory.\textsuperscript{1059} 'Amr b. Ma'dikarib had abandoned his tribe, Sa'd al-'Ashirah, leading Banū Zubayd\textsuperscript{1060} and its allies, and he joined (Murād) and embraced Islam with them; he was in charge of them.\textsuperscript{1061} Then, when al-_ANSĪ apostatized and most people of Madhhij followed him, Farwah withdrew, leading those who stood fast in Islām with him, whereas 'Amr was one of those who apostatized. So al-_ANSĪ appointed him deputy and put him opposite Farwah so that he was facing him. Each one of them stayed put because of his counterpart's being in plain view, so the two of them exchanged poetry. 'Amr said, mentioning the command of Farwah and denouncing it:

We have found the kingship of Farwah to be the worst of kingdoms;
[he is] an ass whose nostrils sniff some filth.

\textsuperscript{1058} I.e., made it unable to walk because of pain.
\textsuperscript{1059} Dār.
\textsuperscript{1060} Sa'd al-'Ashirah was a confederation within Madhhij, and Zubayd a section within Madhhij living a sedentary life in the Wāḍi Tathlith. Cf. Caskel, II, 493 and 608.
\textsuperscript{1061} wa kāna fi-him.
Whenever you saw Abū 'Umayr, you were looking upon the amniotic bag of foulness and afterbirth.\textsuperscript{1062}

So Farwah responded to him:

Some talk has reached me from Abū Thawr;
Of old he used to run among the mules.
God used to hate him before for what there was of foulness and afterbirth.

While the two of them were doing that, 'Ikrimah came to Abyan.\textsuperscript{1063}

According to al-Sārī—Shu'ayb—Sayf—Sahl—al-Qāsim and Mūsā b. al-Ghūṣn—Ibn Muḥayrīz.\textsuperscript{1064} Then 'Ikrimah went out from Mahrah, marching towards the Yemen, until he came to Abyan. With him were many people from Mahrah, Sa'd b. Zayd,\textsuperscript{1065} al-Azd, Nājiyih, 'Abd al-Qays, and Ḥudbān of Banū Mālik b. Kinānah\textsuperscript{1066} and 'Amr b. Jundab from al-'Anbar.\textsuperscript{1067}

Then he gathered al-Nakha' after he struck those of them who had retreated, and said to them, "What was your position in this matter?" At this they told him, "During the jāhiliyyah we were the people of a religion,\textsuperscript{1069} not dealing [with people] the way some of the Arabs used to deal with others. All the more so since we have come to a religion whose merit we recognize and which we have come to love."\textsuperscript{1070} Whereupon he asked about them, [and found that] the situation was as they said. Their \textsuperscript{1062.} Or "treachery" [\textit{al-ghadr}], also in poem immediately following.

\textsuperscript{1065.} Either the tribe of Sa'd b. Zaydmanāt of Tamim, or Sa'd Ḥudhaym b. Zayd.
\textsuperscript{1066.} Ḥudbān b. Jādīmūn was part of Mālik b. Khānūn; cf. Caskel, I, Table 47, II, 327.
\textsuperscript{1067.} 'Amr b. Jundab was a branch of Banū Ḥudaym of 'Amr b. Tamīm; cf. Caskel I, Table 81, II, 173.
\textsuperscript{1068.} Lit., "how were you ... ?"
\textsuperscript{1069.} \textit{din}; presumably meaning here a revealed religion such as Christianity, not pre-Islamic Arabian polytheism.
\textsuperscript{1070.} \textit{Fa-kayfa bind idha sirnd ild dinin 'arafnd faqlahu.}
common people stood fast [in the faith], and those of their notables who had withdrawn fled. ['Ikrimah] purged al-Nakha' and Himyar and remained so they could gather 'round him. When 'Ikrimah descended upon the Yemen, Qays b. 'Abd Yaghuth fled to 'Amr b. Ma‘dikarib; but after he had joined him, a dispute broke out between them and they found fault with one another. Then 'Amr b. Ma‘dikarib said, reproaching Qays for his treachery toward the Abnā' and his killing of Dādhwahayh, and mentioning his flight from Fayruz:

You acted treacherously and did not do well in faithfulness; no one can endure [such] deeds except the one who is accustomed. How could Qays exalt himself if he were to compete with a [truly] noble leader?

And Qays said:

I was faithful to my tribe and, preparing for action, I gathered [to meet] a company that struck 'Amr and Marthad despite the tribes. When I met the Abnā', I was to them like a lion who aspires to lionhood through might.

And 'Amr b. Ma‘dikarib said:

Dādhwahayh is not [a source of] glory for you; rather, Dādhwahayh disgraced what must be protected. And Fayruz by morning spread affliction among you and remained in your groups and sought refuge.

[1997]

The Story of Tahir When He Marched to Reinforce Fayruz

Abū Ja‘far al-Ṭabari said: Abū Bakr had written to Tahir b. Abi Hālah and to Masrūq to go down to Ṣan‘ā' and to assist the Abnā'; so the two of them went out until they came to Ṣan‘ā'. and he wrote [also] to 'Abdallāh b. Thawr b. Aṣghar1072 to gather 1071. Istabra’a.

---

1072. Cf. Ṭabarī, I, 2136: of Ghawth (Ṭayyi').
to himself the Arabs and those people of the Tihāmah who responded to him, and then to remain in his place until his command should reach him. Now the story of the first apostasy of 'Amr b. Ma'dīkarib was that he had been with Khālid b. Sa’īd, but he clashed with him and responded [favorably] to al-Aswad. So Khālid b. Sa’īd marched against him until he encountered him; then they exchanged two blows. Khālid struck ('Amr) on his shoulder, severing the harness for his sword, which fell, and the blow reached his shoulder. 'Amr struck (Khālid), but did not produce any effect. Then when Khālid wished to [strike him] a second time, ('Amr) dismounted and climbed up into the mountains [in flight]. (Khālid) plundered him of his horse and his sword, “The Persistent”; 'Amr took refuge among those to whom he fled.

Now the estate of the family of Sa’īd b. al-‘Aṣ the Elder became the property of Sa’īd b. al-‘Aṣ the Younger; then, after (Sa’īd the Younger) was appointed [to govern] al-Kūfah, ‘Amr [b. Ma’dīkarib] offered him his daughter [in marriage], but he did not accept her. (Sa’īd) came to ('Amr) in his house, bringing a number of swords that Khālid had taken in the Yemen. Whereupon (Sa’īd) said, “Which of them is ‘The Persistent’?” (‘Amr) said, “This one.” [So] he said [to ‘Amr], “Take it, it is yours.” So he took it. Then he saddled a mule of his and struck the pad [with the sword], severing it and the saddle, and making the mule hurry. Then he returned it to Sa’īd, saying, “If you had visited me in my house and it was mine, I would have given it to you. But I cannot accept it since it fell.”

According to al-Sārī—Shu’ayb—Sayf—al-Mustanīr b. Yazīd—‘Urwaḥ b. Ghaziyyah and Mūsā—Abū Zur’ah al-Shaybānī: When al-Muhājir b. Abī Umayyah left Abū Bakr—he was among the last who left—he took the Mecca road. So he passed by it, whereupon Khālid b. Asīd followed him; and he passed by al-

---

1074. Sa’īd b. al-‘Aṣ the Younger, of the Umayyah clan of Quraysh, was grandson of Sa’īd the Elder; Cf. Caskel, II, 500.
Ta'if, upon which 'Abd al-Rahmân b. Abî al-'Âs followed him. Then he continued on until, when he was opposite Jarîr b. 'Abd- allâh, he joined him to him[eself], and 'Abdallâh b. Thawr joined him when he was opposite him. Then he came to the people of Najrân, upon which Farwah b. Musayk joined him. 'Amr b. Ma'dîkarîb abandoned Qays [b. 'Abd Yaghûth] and approached in response until he entered upon al-Muhâjir without any [pledge of] protection. So al-Muhâjir tied him up, and he tied up Qays, and wrote of their situation to Abû Bakr and sent the two of them to him. Then, when al-Muhâjir marched from Najrân to the Lahjîtes1076 and the cavalry gathered against those fugitive soldiers, they demanded protection. But he refused to give them security, whereupon they separated into two groups. So al-Muhâjir encountered one of [the two groups] at 'Ajîb,1077 destroying them. His cavalry found the other on the "road of the wicked ones," destroying them and the cavalry of 'Abdallâh. He killed the scattered remnants on every byway.

Then Qays and 'Amr were brought before Abû Bakr; so he said, "Oh Qays, did you wage aggression against the servants of God, killing them and adopting as followers the apostates and polytheists, to the exclusion of the believers?" Now he intended to kill him if he found a clear case. Qays denied that he was in any way involved in the affair of Dâdawayh, for that deed had been done in secret, of which there was no evidence. So [Abû Bakr] shrank from [taking] his blood. To 'Amr b. Ma'dîkarîb (Abû Bakr) said, "Aren't you ashamed that you are every day defeated or captive? If you had aided this religion, God would have exalted you." Then he released him, and returned the two of them to their tribes. 'Amr said, "There is no avoiding it; verily I shall consent [to embrace Islam], and not recant."

According to al-Sârî—Shu'ayb—Sayf—al-Mustanîr and Mûsâ: Al-Muha'jir marched from 'Ajîb until he descended upon San'â'. He commanded that the scattered [men] of the tribes who had 1076. Al-Lahjîyyah. Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 150, wished to read this as "al-Râfidah." Lahî is a town in southwestern Arabia, ca. 25 km northwest of Aden, and surrounding district. Cf. EI², s.v. "Lahî" [G. R. Smith].

---

1077. Yaqût, doubtless basing his remark on this account, describes it only as "a place in Yemen."
fled should be pursued, so they killed those of them they could by every means. He did not pardon [any] rebel, [but] he accepted the penance of those who repented without rebellion. They did that to the extent that they saw [justification in] the actions [of the repenting people], and [to the extent that] they held some hope [of finding] them. He wrote to Abû Bakr about his entry into Ạn‘âr and about the consequences of that.

The Account of Ḥaḍramawt during Their Apostasy

According to Abû Ja‘far—al-Sarî—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—al-Šalt—Kathir b. al-Šalt: Ṣf [When] the Apostle of God died, his governors over the country of Ḥaḍramawt [were] Ziyād b. Labid al-Bayāḍi over Ḥaḍramawt, 'Ukkâshah b. Thawr over the Sakāsik and Sakûn, and al-Muhâjîr over Kindah. (Al-Muhâjîr was [still] in Medina; he did not go out until [after] the Apostle of God died; so Abû Bakr sent him afterward to fight those in the Yemen, and to continue on afterward to his governorship (‘amal).

According to al-Sarî—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Abû al-Sâ‘ib ‘Atâ’ b. Fulân al-Makhzûmî—his father—Umm Salamah and al-Muhâjîr b. Abî Umayyah: Ṣf [Al-Muhâjîr] had held back from [the raid on] Tabûk, so the Apostle of God returned angry with him. While Umm Salamah was washing the head of the Apostle of God, she said, “How can I enjoy anything while you are angry with my brother?” Then she noticed some pity on his part, so she nodded to her manservant; then she left him, and he remained with the Apostle of God seeking [al-Muhâjîr’s] forgiveness until he forgave him and became pleased with him and appointed him over Kindah. Subsequently (al-Muhājir) fell ill and was unable to go out [to his governorship], so [the Apostle] wrote to Ziyād to occupy his governorship for him. (Al-Muhājir) became well afterward; then Abū Bakr confirmed his command and ordered him to fight whoever was between Najrān and the farthest [corner] of the Yemen. For that reason, Ziyād and 'Ukkāshah were slow to fight the Kindah, as they were waiting for him.

1082. Lit., “How can anything profit me?” Ibn al-Athîr, Kâmil: “How can life profit me?”

According to al-Sāri—Shū'ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yūsuf—al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad:1084 The cause of the apostasy of Kindah and1085 their responding [favorably] to al-Aswād al-‘Anṣī, so that the Apostle of God cursed the four kings,1086 was [as follows]: When they had embraced ʿIṣlām before their apostasy and all the people of the Ḥadramawt country had embraced ʿIṣlām, the Apostle of God, among what was being imposed by way of ṣadāqah taxes, had ordered that the ṣadāqah tax of part of Ḥadramawt be assigned among the Kindah, and he assigned the ṣadāqah tax of the Kindah among part of the Ḥadramawt; [likewise he assigned] part of the [tax of] Ḥadramawt among the Sakūn, and [the tax of] the Sakūn among part of the Ḥadramawt. Then some people of Banū Wālī‘ah1087 said, "Oh Apostle of God, we are not possessors of camels; do you think (Hadramawt) would send (the tax) to us on pack camels?" So he asked [Ḥadramawt] what they thought was proper.1088 They said, "We shall look [into it], and if they really have no camels we shall do it." Now after the Apostle of God had died and that time came,1089 Ziyād summoned the people to [fulfill] that. So they gathered to him, whereupon Banū Wālī‘ah said [to Ḥadramawt], "Pay us [the camels] as you promised the Apostle of God!" But they (Ḥadramawt) said, "You have pack camels, so go on!"1090

---

1085. Reading with Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, and Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 150.
1087. A clan of Kindah, according to Ibn Ṭanẓūr, VIII, 4111 and Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil.
1088. The text is awkward. Lit., "So he said, 'If you think proper.'"
1089. Presumably the time when the payment of tax was due. Wa jā‘a dhālika al-ibbān.
1090. I.e., "so go get it yourselves."
At this (Banû Walî'ah) became angry and quarreled with them, to the point that they quarreled with Ziyâd [also], saying to him, "You are [siding] with them, against us." Subsequently the Ḥaḍramîs refused [to send any șadaqah] while the Kindis insisted, so they returned to their homes and bided their time. Ziyâd kept aloof from [the Ḥaḍramîs], waiting for al-Muhâjîr. When al-Muhâjîr reached Șan‘â’ and wrote to Abû Bakr about everything that he had done, he remained [there] until the reply to his letter came from Abû Bakr. Abû Bakr wrote to him and to 'Ikrima that they should march until they reached Ḥaḍramawt, and confirm Ziyâd over his governorship, and permit those who were with them from [the country] between Mecca and the Yemen to return home, unless a group preferred jiḥâd, [in which case] he would reinforce him with 'Ubaydah b. Sa‘d. So he did [that]. Then al-Muhâjîr marched from Șan‘â’ heading for Ḥaḍramawt, and 'Ikrimah marched from Abyan heading for Ḥaḍramawt; so the two of them met at Ma‘rib. Then they entered the desert from Șayhâd until they fell upon Ḥaḍramawt, one of them staying with al-As‘âfî and the other with Wâ’il.1093

According to al-Sa‘rî—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Sahl b. Yûsuf—his father—Kathîr b. al-Šalt:1094 When the Kindis returned [to their homes] and became obstinate and the Ḥaḍramîs became obstinate, Ziyâd b. Labîd administered the șadaqah taxes of Banû 'Amr b. Mu‘âwiyyah himself, approaching them while they were in al-Riyâd and collecting the șadaqah tax from the first of them whom he reached, a youth called Shaytân b. Hujir. He admired one of the young she-camels of the șadaqah tax and called for fire and put the branding iron to her. Now the she-camel belonged to the brother of al-Shaytân, al-‘Addâ’ b. Hûjur, 1095 who owed no \textit{sadaqah} tax; but his brother had made a mistake when he gave her out [in payment], thinking that she was another [camel]. So al-‘Addā said, “This is Nugget,” [calling the camel] by her name. At this al-Shayṭān said, “My brother is right; I only gave her to you because I thought she was another. So release Nugget and take another, for she is not one to be relinquished.” But Ziyād thought that that was [merely] a pretext of his, and accused him of unbelief and of being estranged from Islām and of intending evil, so he grew hot [with anger], and the two men did also. So Ziyād said, “No, she will not be given up. She is not yours; the branding-iron of the \textit{sadaqah} has fallen upon her and she has become God’s property.\footnote{\textit{haqq} Allah.} There is no way to return her, so may Nugget not weigh upon you like al-Basūs.\footnote{Fa-lā takūnanna Shadharatun `alaykum ka-l-basūs. Probably a reference to the she-camel of al-Basūs bt. Munqīdh, the killing [or wounding] of which precipitated a bitter feud between the tribes of Bakr and Taghlib, according to legend. This she-camel became proverbial for something unlucky \textit{(ash’amu min nāqat al-Basūs)}. Cf. \textit{EIP}, s.v. “Al-Basūs” (J. W. Fück); Ibn Manzūr, \textit{VI}, 28.} At this al-‘Addā called out, “Oh family of ‘Amr in al-Riyād! I am being wronged and oppressed! Contemptible is whoever is destroyed in his own abode!” He called out, “Oh Abū al-Sumayṭ!” So Abū al-Sumayṭ Ḥārithah b. Surāqah b. Ma’dikarib\footnote{Cf. Balansi, 161–62.} approached and headed for Ziyād b. Labīd while he was standing [there], and said to him, “Let this youth have his she-camel, and take a [different] camel in her place, for it is only a camel instead of [another] camel.” But (Ziyād) said, “There is no way to [do] that.” At this (Abū al-Sumayṭ) replied, “That [would be so only] if you were a Jew”; and he turned to her and released her tether. Then he struck her on the side, sending her off.\footnote{Or perhaps, “making her get up” (fa-ba’atha-hā).} He stood up near her while saying:

\begin{quote}
She is protected by an old man with white hair on his cheeks, mottled as the robe is mottled.
\end{quote}

So Ziyād ordered some youths of Ḥadramawt and al-Sakūn on him; they roughed him up and trampled him and handcuffed him and his companions and took them hostage, and they seized
The people of al-Riyāḍ cried out to one another and called each other. Banū Mu‘āwiyah [b. Kindah] became angry on behalf of Ḥārithah and openly showed their attitude. The Sakūn became angry on behalf of Ziyād, as did the Ḥaḍramawt, and they stood together to defend him. There gathered two great armies [drawn] from the former and the latter. Banū Mu‘āwiyah did not initiate anything because of the existence of their captives, and so the companions of Ziyād did not find any pretext for taking on the Banū Mu‘āwiyah. Then Ziyād sent to them: “Either put down [your] weapons or give notice of war.” So to this they replied, “We shall never put down [our] weapons, until you have sent our [captive] companions.” To this Ziyād said, “They shall never be sent until you disperse in abasement and shame. Oh most wicked of people, are you not inhabitants of Ḥaḍramawt, and protected neighbors\textsuperscript{1101} of al-Sakūn? Then what can you be and do in the abode of Ḥaḍramawt and at the side of your masters, [except follow them]?” The Sakūn said to [Ziyād], “Rush the group, for only that will disengage them.” So he rushed upon them by night, killing some of them, and they fled in groups, going in every direction. Ziyād quoted, when morning found him in their camp:

I was not a man to start war unjustly, but, when they refused, I was obliging in the War of Ḥāṭib.\textsuperscript{1102}

After the group had fled, he let the three people go; and Ziyād returned to his residence in victory. After the captives returned \textsuperscript{1100} The second hemistich reads: \textit{wa al-shaykhu qad yathnī-hi urjūb}. The final word is unknown; cf. manuscript C, which has \textit{ārḥūb} or \textit{urḥūb}.

\textsuperscript{1101} \textit{jirān}.

\textsuperscript{1102} The War of Ḥāṭib was a major clash among the Arab clans of Medina on the eve of Islam, which ended indecisively in the bloody battle of Bu’āth. Cf. Watt, \textit{Muḥammad at Medina}, 156–58.
to their companions, they chided them so that they incited one another to fight, saying, "This country is not fit for us or for them until it becomes free for one of the two groups." So they gathered and formed an army together, and called for withholding the \textit{sadaqah} tax. But Ziyād left them [alone], and did not go out against them; so that they left off marching against him. He sent al-Ḥuṣayn b. Numayr\textsuperscript{1103} to them, and he kept seeking reconciliation of what divided them from Ziyād, Ḥaḍramawt, and al-Sakūn, until they calmed one another down. This was the second secession; about that al-Sakūnī said:

\begin{quote}
By my life—and my life is not something taken lightly!—
Banū ʿAmr could draw bitter things from it.
You lied; by the house of God, you do not hold it back from Ziyād after we had come to Ziyād as equals.
\end{quote}

They remained a little while after that; then Banū ʿAmr b. Muʿāwiyah especially went out to the reserved places of pasture\textsuperscript{1104}—to pastures that they had restricted [from public use]. So Jamad encamped in a reserved pasture, Mikhwaṣ in a reserved pasture, Mishraḥ and Abḍaʾah\textsuperscript{1105} in others, and their sister al-ʿAmarradah in a reserved pasture. The Banū ʿAmr b. Muʿāwiyah were under these leaders,\textsuperscript{1106} and Banū al-Ḥārīth b. Muʿāwiyah encamped in their reserved pastures, such that al-ʾAshʿath b. Qays encamped in a reserved pasture, and al-Simṭ b. al-Aswād\textsuperscript{1107} in a pasture. All of [Banū] Muʿāwiyah agreed to withhold the \textit{sadaqah} tax and resolved unanimously to apos-

\begin{footnotes}
\footnotetext[1103]{Two individuals bear this name: one, an Anṣārī, participated in the conquest of Tabūk and may have been ʿUmar’s governor of al-Urdunn; the other, of Sakūn, was commander of the army sent against Mecca by the Umayyad caliph Yazid I in the early AD 680s. Cf. Ibn Ḥajar, \textit{Isāḥah}, s.vv.}
\footnotetext[1104]{\textit{Mahājir} (sing. \textit{mahjar}). The following three words, \textit{iḍā ʿahmāʾ hamawḥā}, appear to be a gloss clarifying the meaning of \textit{mahjar} in terms of the more familiar word \textit{himā}, which has the same meaning.}
\footnotetext[1106]{Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 380: “They were the four kings, the chiefs of ʿAmr whom the Apostle of God had cursed.”}
\footnotetext[1107]{Chief of Kindah; his deeds are confused with those of his son Shurahbil b. al-Simṭ. Cf. Caskel, II, 523; Ibn Ḥajar, \textit{Isāḥah}, s.vv.}
\end{footnotes}
tatize, except for Shurahbil b. al-Simt and his son; the two of them stood up among the Banu Mu'awiya and said, "By God, this is disgraceful for tribes of free men. [For] noble men, even when [committed] to a doubtful [cause], consider themselves more noble than to change from it to a better one, out of fear of the disgrace [of changing sides]. How, then, [can you countenance] turning back from what is proper and true to what is false and shameful? Oh God, we do not help our tribe with this! We regret their joining together to this day”—meaning the day of the she-camel and the day of the secession.

Shurahbil b. al-Simt and his son, al-Simt, went out until they came to Ziyad b. Labid and joined him. Ibn Salih and Imru' al-Qays b. 'Abis1108 [also] went out until they came to Ziyad and said to him, "Attack the enemy by night, for groups of al-Sakasik have joined them, and a group of al-Sakun and isolated individuals from Hadramawt have hurried to them. Perhaps we may deliver to them a blow that will bequeath enmity between us and draw a distinction between us. If you refuse, we fear that the people will drift from us to them, while the enemy are raiding the place of those who have come to you, hoping [to conquer] those who remained [behind]." At this, he said, "Carry out your plan." So1109 they gathered their troop and came on (the Banu 'Amr b. Mu'awiya) by night in their reserved pastures, finding them sitting around their fires. They knew whom they wanted, so they fell upon the Banu 'Amr b. Mu'awiya from five directions in five groups, for they were the majority of the enemy and the strongest1110 of them. Thus they struck down Mishrah, Mikhwas, Jamad, Abda'ah, and their sister al-'Amarradah. The curse [of the Prophet] reached them. They killed many, and those who could do so fled. Banu 'Amr b. Mu'awiya were so weakened that they [never] recovered after it.

1108. Poet of Kindah, said to have come to the Prophet in a delegation of his tribe and to have remained loyal to Medina during the riddah.
1109. Cf. Balansi, 163.
1110. Or, perhaps, "bravest" or "best armed": shawkatu-hum, lit., "their thorn."
1111. Balansi: Jamd.
Ziyād took away the captives and the flocks, and took a road that brought them to the army of al-Ash'ath and the Banū al-Ḥārith b. Mu‘āwiya. So when they passed by them in it, the womenfolk of Banū ‘Amr b. Mu‘āwiya asked Banū al-Ḥārith for help, and called to him: "Oh Ash'ath! Oh Ash'ath! Your maternal aunts! Your maternal aunts!" At this, Banū al-Ḥārith became stirred up to rescue them. This [was] the third [secession]. Al-Ash’ath said:

I defended Banū ‘Amr after their troop had come with more goats and more prisoners than the day of al-Buḍayd.¹¹¹³

[2006] Now al-Ash’ath knew that Ziyād and his army, if they learned of that, would not desist from [attacking] him nor from Banū al-Ḥārith b. Mu‘āwiya and Banū ‘Amr b. Mu‘āwiya, so he gathered to himself Banū al-Ḥārith b. Mu‘āwiya and Banū ‘Amr b. Mu‘āwiya and those who obeyed them of al-Sakāsik and small groups of whatever tribes were around them. Those tribes who were in Ḥadramawt became estranged from one another because of this battle. Ziyād’s companions stood firm in obedience to Ziyād, and Kindah was unyielding; so after the tribes had become estranged from one another, Ziyād wrote to al-Muhājir and the people corresponded with him, meeting him with the letter after he had crossed Ṣayḥad, a desert between Ma’rib and Ḥadramawt. He left Ikrimah in charge of the army and hurried ahead with the fastest troops. Then he marched until he came upon Ziyād, whereupon he rushed upon Kindah, who were led by al-Ash’ath, so that they met in the reserved pasture (mahjar) of al-Zurgan¹¹¹⁷ and fought in it.

¹¹¹² Or "property" (amwāl).
¹¹¹³ Possibly a watering place in Ṭayyi’ country in north central Arabia; cf. Yāqūt, s.v.
¹¹¹⁴ Khasā’īs. This rendering seems more natural to me than that proposed by De Goeje, "[people of] huts"; cf. Glossary, s.v. "Khasā’īs."
¹¹¹⁵ Or "the army": al-nās.
¹¹¹⁶ Mss. B and C have Ṣahbadh and Ṣahyad, respectively, but cf. note 143, above.
¹¹¹⁷ Yāqūt’s information on al-Zurqān is derived from this account.
Consequently Kindah were defeated and killed. They went out in flight and took refuge in al-Nujayr, having repaired and fortified it beforehand. Al-Muhājur said regarding the day of the reserved pasture of al-Zurqān:

We were at Zurgan when you were dispersed by a sea that drives firewood in its waves. We slew you in your reserved pasture until you rode off out of fear of us, To a fortress the easiest [part] of whose [conquest] is capturing the offspring and driving them off at a brisk pace.

Al-Muhājur marched with the people from the reserved pasture of al-Zurqān until he descended upon al-Nujayr, the Kindah having gathered there and fortified themselves in it. With them were those whom they had asked for help from al-Sakāsik and isolated individuals from al-Sakūn and Ḥaḍramawt. Now al-Nujayr is at the intersection of three roads; so Ziyād descended upon one of them, and al-Muhājur upon another, and the third was free for them to come and go until Ikrimah should arrive with the army. Then he settled (Ikrimah) upon that [third] road, so that he cut off Kindah’s supplies and repulsed them. He divided the cavalry among Kindah and ordered them to crush them. Among those whom he sent was Yazīd b. Qanān of Banū Malik b. Saʿd, so he killed those who were in the settlements of Banū Hind as far as Barahut. Among those whom he dispatched to the coast were Khalid b. Fulān al-Makhzūmi and Rabiʿah al-Ḥadrami; they killed the people of Mahā and other clans. Kindah learned what had befallen the rest of their people while they were in their fortress, so they said, “Death is better than the situation you find yourselves in [now], shear your forelocks, so that you are like a people who have given your souls to God—so may He be gracious to you, and 1118. A famous old fort in Yemen; cf. Hamdānī, 87, 203. Yāqūt, s.v. gives, in a long entry, a summary of the events of this chapter of the riddah, but little additional information on al-Nujayr.

---

1119. A branch of Zaydmanát of Tamīm; cf. Caskel, I, Table 75 and II, 394.

1120. A branch of Kindah; cf. Caskel, I, Table 234 and II, 283.

may you return [from God] with His blessings! Perhaps He will assist you against these tyrants." So they sheared their forelocks and made a pact, agreeing that no one of them would flee leaving another behind. Their poet began to recite rajaz\(^{1122}\) in the middle of the night from the top of their fortress:

A morning of evil for Banû Qatirah\(^{1123}\) and for the commander from Banû al-Mughirah.\(^{1124}\)

The Muslims' poet, Ziyād b. Dinār, took to replying to them:

Do not threaten us and endure the confinement.
We are the cavalry of the child of al-Mughirah.
In the morning the tribe shall be victorious.

[2008] When it was morning, they went out against the people, killing in the courtyards of al-Nujayr until there were many slain opposite each one of the three roads. On that day, Ḥikrimah began to recite rajaz, saying:

I pierce them while I am in haste,
A piercing that I will repeat\(^{1125}\) [when] on the way back.

He also said:

My word was spent; indeed it has effect,
And everyone who seeks my protection is protected.

So Kindah was vanquished, they having killed many of them.

According to Hishām b. Muḥammad:\(^{1126}\) After al-Muhājir had finished with the enemy, Ḥikrimah b. Abī Jahl came as a reinforcement for him. So Ziyād and al-Muhājir said to those who were with them, "Your brethren have arrived as reinforcement for you [only] after you had [completed] the conquest; but let them share in the booty [anyway]." So they did that and allowed \(^{1122}\) A common form of verse in iambic meter.

---

\(^{1123}\) Qatirah b. Harithah was a branch of Sakūn/Kindah, cf. Caskel, II, 468. Balansi, 164ff., vocalizes the name "Qatayrah." However, the rhyme makes it obvious that Qatirah is the correct form.

\(^{1124}\) The clan of Makhzūm (of Quraysh) to which Ḥikrimah b. Abī Jahl belonged; cf. Caskel, I, Tables 22 and 23; EI\(^2\), s.v. "Makhzūm" [M. Hinds].

\(^{1125}\) Reading with Cairo, instead of "that I confess" in the text.

\(^{1126}\) Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 382. those who joined them to share [the booty], recommending that to each other. They sent the fifths [of booty] and the captives [to Medina]; the heralds marched so that they got there before them. [The heralds] were spreading the news among the tribes and reading to them [news of] the conquest.

According to al-Sari: Abū Bakr wrote to al-Muhājir with al-Mughirah b. Shu`bah:1128 "If this letter of mine reaches you before you have achieved victory, then—if you conquer the enemy—kill the fighting men and take the offspring captive if you took them by force, or let them fall under my verdict.1129 If [on the other hand] you have [already] concluded a treaty with them before [my letter reaches you], then [let it be] on condition that you expel them from their abodes; for I am averse to leaving intact in their homes enemies who have done what they did. Let them know that they had done evil, and let them taste the offensiveness of some of what they did."

According to Abū Ja`far:1130 When the people of al-Nujayr saw that the Muslims’ supplies were not cut off and they ascertained that [the Muslims] would not turn back from them, their souls were filled with fear. They feared being killed, and the leaders feared for themselves. If they held out until al-Mughirah should arrive, they would have been saved because they had [concluded] a treaty for the third time on condition of being expelled. Al-Ash’ath hurried to go out to ‘Ikrimah with an assurance of protection. (Al-Ash’ath) did not trust anyone else. That was because ('Ikrimah) was married to Asmā’ bt. al-Nu’mān b. Abī al-Jawn;1131 he had become engaged to her while he was in al-

1127. Ms. B adds kitāb, “the letter” or “the book” (about the conquest). Cf.
Wellhausen, Skizzen, VI, 150 on bashīr as “heralds.”
1128. A felon from al-Ṭā’if who fled to Medina and attached himself to the Prophet’s entourage as bodyguard and military commander; later employed as 1129. Hukm. i.e., let them surrender unconditionally, so that they fall under my verdict.
1131. Emendanda proposes “... al-Nu‘mān b. al-Jawn,” but sources vary on the name; Cf. Caskel, II, 451 (“al-Nu‘mān b. ‘Amr b. Mu‘awiya”); cf. Ibn al-Athir, Usd., V, 396–98, Ibn Sa’d, VIII, 102–51, and p. 190, below. Asmā’ was a noble Kindite woman whose marriage to the Prophet was never consummated.
Subsequently she married both al-Muhājir b. Abī Umayyah and ‘Ikrimah b. Abī Jahl.
Janad\textsuperscript{1132} awaiting al-Muhājir, so her father presented her to him before they set out. So 'Ikrimah conveyed [al-Ash'ath] to al-Muhājir and asked him to grant him protection for his life and nine people with him, on condition that he should stand as surety for them and their families if they would open the gate for them. So he complied with his [request] in this, and said, "Go away so as to save yourself; then bring me your letter so I may seal it."

According to al-Sarī—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Abū Ishaq al-Shaybānī—Sa‘īd b. Abī Burdah—‘Amir\textsuperscript{1133} [Al-Ash'ath] came to him and requested protection for his family, his property, and nine of those whom he wished, on condition that he would open the gate for them so that they could enter in upon his tribe. Whereupon al-Muhājir said to him, "Write down what you want, and be quick about it"; so he wrote his pledge of security and one for them. Among them were his brother and his paternal cousins and their families; but, in [his] haste and perplexity, he forget [to include] himself. Then he brought the letter, whereupon [al-Muhājir] sealed it and went back, letting those [mentioned] in the letter go their way.

According to Al-Ajlah and al-Mujālid: When the only thing remaining was for [al-Ash'ath] to write himself [into the pledge of security], [someone named] Jaḥdam pounced upon him with a blade and said, "Your life unless you write me [into it]!" So he wrote him [into it] and left himself out.

According to Abū Ishaq\textsuperscript{1134} After [al-Ash'ath] opened the gate, the Muslims rushed upon [al-Nujayr], not letting any combatant go, but rather killing them by cutting off their heads while in captivity. One thousand of the women of al-Nujayr and al-Khandaq were counted up, and guards were placed among the captives and booty. Kathīr\textsuperscript{1135} agreed with them [in their recounting of events].

According to Kathīr b. al-Ṣalt\textsuperscript{1136} After the gate had been \textsuperscript{1132} Or: "with the army." Cf. p. 190, below.

\textsuperscript{1133} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 381.
\textsuperscript{1134} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 381.
\textsuperscript{1135} See following sanad.
\textsuperscript{1136} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, \textit{Kāmil}, II, 381–82.
opened and whoever was in al-Nujayr had been finished off and after what God had bestowed on [the Muslims] as booty had been calculated, [al-Muhājir] summoned al-Ashʿath with those persons [he had mentioned], and called for his document. Then he reviewed them and pardoned those who were [mentioned] in the document,1137 but lo, al-Ashʿath was not [named] in it. At this al-Muhājir said, “Praise be to God, who made your star to miss,1138 oh Ashʿath, oh enemy of God! I had been wishing that God would abase you.” Then he bound him in ropes and intended to kill him. But 'Ikrimah said to him, “Grant him a postponement and send him to Abū Bakr, for he is more knowledgeable about judging [cases such as] this. If a man forgot to write his [own] name but was promised good treatment by word of mouth,1139 does [the oversight] nullify [the promise]?” To this al-Muhājir replied, “His case is perfectly clear, but I will follow [your] advice and show it preference.”1140 He granted him a postponement and sent him to Abū Bakr along with the captives. So he was with them, the Muslims and the captives from his tribe [alike] cursing him. A woman of his tribe called him “favor of fire,”1141 a Yemenite phrase by which they call a traitor. Now al-Mughirah was perplexed one night because that was God’s will. So he came with the enemy [still stained] with blood and the captives, on camels. The captives and prisoners marched and the group reached Abū Bakr with [news of] the conquest and with the captives and prisoners. Then (Abu Bakr) called for al-Ashʿath, whereupon he said,1142 “Banū Waliʿah led you astray; you would not lead them astray, [for] they do not think enough of you [to do] that. [So] they were destroyed and destroyed you. Aren’t you afraid [to rebel, seeing] that something of the message of the Apostle of God had reached you? What do you 1137. Lit., “he declared them legal” (ajāza).

1138. I.e., who brought you bad luck.
1139. Lit., “he was the friend of conversation.”
1140. Reading, with the text, uʾthiru-hā rather than the Emendanda’s uʾthiru-hu.
1141. ‘Urf al-nār.
1142. The text of Abū Bakr’s comment is problematic, and the Cairo and Leiden editions offer slightly different readings, neither of which is entirely lucid.
think I should do with you? He replied, "I have no idea what you are thinking; you know best what you think." (Abū Bakr) said, "I think you should be killed." (Al-Ash`ath) replied, "I am the one who persuaded the adversary\textsuperscript{1143} [to spare] ten [people], so that my blood should not be licit." (Abū Bakr) said, "Did they empower you [to do so]?") He replied, "Yes." (Abū Bakr) said, "Then you brought them what had been entrusted to you, whereupon they placed [their] seal upon it?" He replied, "Yes." (Abū Bakr) said, "Peace is required after sealing of a document only for those [named] in the document; before that, you were only a negotiator." Then, when he feared that (Abū Bakr) would fall upon him, (al-Ash`ath) said, "And do you reckon there to be some good in me? Then release me and forgive my misbehavior, accept my Islam and do with me as you have done with others like me, and return my wife to me"—he had been engaged to Umm Farwah bt. Abi Quhafah\textsuperscript{1144} when he [first] came to the Apostle of God, whereupon (Abū Bakr) had married him [to her], but withheld her [from him] until he should come a second time, then the Apostle of God had died and al-Ash`ath had done what he did, so he feared that she would not be returned to him—"[should you do these things], you will find me the best of the people of my land in the religion of God." So (Abū Bakr) spared him\textsuperscript{1145} and accepted [this] from him. He returned his wife to him, and said, "Go, and let me hear [only] good about you," and let the people alone so that they went away. Abū Bakr divided the fifth [of booty] among the people, and the army distributed the four-fifths [among themselves].

Abū Ja`far said: According to Ibn Ḥumayd—Salamah—Ibn Ishāq—Abdallāh b. Abi Bakr: After al-Ash`ath was brought before Abū Bakr, he said, "What do you think I should do to you? For you know what you have done." He replied, "You should be gracious to me and release me from the irons and marry your sister to me, for I have come back and embraced Islam." So Abū Bakr said, "Done," and married him to Umm \textsuperscript{1143} Qawm; here, referring to the Muslims.

\textsuperscript{1144} Abū Bakr’s sister; cf. Ibn al-Athir, \textit{Usd}, V, 208.

\textsuperscript{1145} Lit., "relinquished to him [claim to] his blood."
Farwah bt. Abī Quḥāfah. [Al-Ash‘ath] was in Medina until the conquest of Iraq.

Continuation of the Report of Sayf

When\(^{1146}\) 'Umar acceded [to the caliphate], he said, "It is disgraceful that one of the Arabs should own another, God having enriched [us] and conquered the non-Arabs." He consulted about ransoming the captives of the Arabs from the jāhiliyyah and Islam [except for the woman who had borne a child to her master], and made the ransom of each person seven camels and six camels,\(^{1147}\) except for Ḥanīfah and Kindah, on whom he lightened [the ransom] because of the slaughter of their men, and [except for] those who were not able [to pay] the ransom because of their great number,\(^{1148}\) and the people of Dabā. So their men searched for their womenfolk in every place.\(^{1149}\) Then al-Ash‘ath found two women among the Banū Nahd\(^{1150}\) and the Banū Ghutayf.\(^{1151}\) [The story of] that was that he stopped among them, asking after "Raven" and "Eagle," so he was told, "What do you intend with that?" He replied, "At the battle of al-Nujayr, the eagles and ravens and wolves\(^{1152}\) and dogs snatched away our women." Whereupon Banū Ghutayf said, "This is 'Raven.'" He asked, "What is his position among you?" They replied, "Under protection."\(^{1153}\) He said, "Good, then," and departed. 'Umar said, "No one shall be master of an Arab,"\(^{1154}\) because of that which he and the Muslims agreed upon.

\(^{1146}\) Cf. Ibn al-Athir, Kāmil, II, 382.
\(^{1147}\) I.e., six or seven camels per captive. Kos has "six young camels"; lacking in B.
\(^{1148}\) Reading, with Emendanda, li-fi‘āmihim for the text’s li-qiyāmihim.
\(^{1149}\) Although the word sabāyā (“captives”) can apply to captives of either gender, the passage implies that the majority of captives were women.
\(^{1150}\) Nahd b. Zayd was a Quda‘ah tribe with branches in Syria and Yemen. Cf. Caskel, II, 443.
\(^{1151}\) Ghuxayf b. ‘Abdallah was a prominent clan of Murād. Cf. Caskel, II, 275.
\(^{1152}\) Manuscript C: flies.
\(^{1153}\) Fi al-šiyānah, lit., “in keeping.”
\(^{1154}\) Lā mulka ‘ālā ‘arabiyyn, here the word ‘arab seems to mean not “nomad,” but rather something like “speaker of Arabic.”
They said: Al-Muhajir looked into the case of the woman whose father, al-Nu‘mān b. al-Jawn, had offered her to the Apostle of God, whereupon he described her as having never been ill. But (the Prophet) returned her, saying, “We have no need of her,” after he had seated her in front of him; he said, “If she had any merit with God, she would have become ill.” Then al-Muhajir said to ‘Ikrimah, “When did you marry her?” He said, “While I was in Aden; she was given to me in al-Janad, whereupon I traveled with her to Ma‘rib. Then I brought her to the army, whereupon some of them said, “Leave her! For she is not fit to be desired.” Others said, “Don’t leave her!” So al-Muhajir wrote to Abū Bakr asking him about that, whereupon Abū Bakr wrote back to him, “Her father, al-Nu‘mān b. al-Jawn, came to the Apostle of God, having beautified her for him, so that (the Apostle) ordered him to bring her to him. After he had brought her to him, he said, ‘I give you in addition [the good news] that she has never suffered pain.’” At this (the Apostle) said, “If she had any merit with God, she would have become ill. He disliked her, so you should dislike her [also].” Then he sent her away.

A number of women remained among Quraysh [as captives] after ‘Umar ordered the ransoming of the captives. Among them was Bushrā bt. Qays b. Abī al-Kaysam; she was with Sa‘d b. Mālik, to whom she bore [his son] ‘Umar. [Another] was Zū‘rah bt. Mishrāḥ, with ‘Abdallāh b. al-‘Abbās, to whom she bore ‘Ali.

Abū Bakr wrote to al-Muhajir, giving him the choice [of the governorship] of the Yemen or Ḥadramawt; whereupon he chose the Yemen. So the Yemen was under two commanders, Fayruz and al-Muhajir. Ḥadramawt was [also] under two commanders, ‘Ubaydah b. Sa‘d over Kindah and al-Sakāsik, and Ziyād b.
Labid over Ḥadramawt. Abū Bakr wrote to the governors of the apostasy: 1161 "Now then: The dearest to me of those whom you have brought into your cause are those who did not apostatize. So gather together whoever did not apostatize, then garner recruits 1162 from them; but grant leave to whoever [of them] wishes to depart. 1163 Do not ask aid of a [former] apostate in fighting against an enemy."

Al-Asḥ ath b. Mi‘nās al-Sakūnī, lamenting the people of al-Nujayr, said: 1164

By my life—and my life has not been easy to me—
  I was really niggardly concerning the slain.
No wonder, except the day lots were cast among them;
  after them, fate is not secure for me.
Would that the flanks of the people were under their flanks;
  after them, no female walked with an embryo.
I am like the she-camel whose young one has died who, when frightened, came up to her dummy calf 1165 as she cried out in yearning for her young one.

According to al-Sari—Shu‘ayb—Sayf—Mūsā b. ‘Uqbah—al-Daḥḥāk b. Khalifah: There arrived before al-Muhājir two singing women. One of them sang reviling the Apostle of God, so he cut off her hand and pulled her front tooth. Then Abū Bakr wrote to him: "I have learned what you did regarding the woman who sang and piped with abuse of the Apostle of God. If you had not beaten me to (punishing her), I would have ordered you to kill her, for the punishment [for abuse] of prophets is not like [other] punishments. So whoever does [something like] that among those claiming to be Muslims is [actually] an apostate; or among 1161. That is, to the governors (‘ummāl) placed over tribes, some of whom had apostasized.

1162. Sanā‘ī, lit., "proteges."
1163. I.e., those who do not wish to join the army should not be required to do so.
1164. Cf. Wathimah, 29/72, which has the same first half-line but is different thereafter.
1165. Baww, the skin of the deceased young stuffed with grass and made available to soothe the mother.
those claiming to be at peace with the Muslims\textsuperscript{166} is [actually] at war [with them] and a traitor.’’ Abū Bakr wrote to him about the woman who had sung satirizing the Muslims, “Now then: I have learned that you cut off the hand of a woman because she sang satirizing the Muslims, and that you pulled her front tooth. If she was among those who claim [to have embraced] Islam, then [it is] good discipline and a reprimand, and not mutilation.\textsuperscript{167} If she was a dhimmi woman, by my life that which you forgave [by way] of polytheism is greater [than what she was punished for]. If I had [had a chance to] precede you [to punishment] in [a cause] like this, I would have done something loathsome; so undertake to be gentle and beware of mutilation among the people, for (mutilation) is an offense and generates fear [among the people], unless [made] in chastisement [for a crime].’’

In this year\textsuperscript{168}—I mean year 11—Mu‘ādh b. Jabal left the Yemen, and Abū Bakr appointed ‘Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb judge. He was in charge of judgeship for the entire time of (Abū Bakr’s) caliphate.

In [this year]\textsuperscript{169} Abū Bakr put ‘Attāb b. Asīd in charge of the pilgrimage ceremonies, according to those upon whom ‘Alī b. Muḥammad based his account, whose names I mentioned beforehand in this book of mine.\textsuperscript{170} [But] according to ‘Alī b. Muḥammad: [Another] group said no, ‘Abd al-Rahmān b. ‘Awf led the people on pilgrimage in the year 11, upon Abū Bakr’s ordering him to do that.

\textsuperscript{166} Mu‘āhid, a non-Muslim who has concluded a pact (‘ahd) with the Muslims recognizing their superiority and agreeing to pay tribute. The discussion here uses the vocabulary of, and betrays the influence of, second and third century AH classical Islamic jurisprudence.

\textsuperscript{167} The terms involved are adab, taqdimah, and muthlah.

\textsuperscript{168} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 383; Caetani, 685.

\textsuperscript{169} Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, Kāmil, II, 383.

\textsuperscript{170} Cf. p. 38, above, for full isnād of ‘Alī b. Muḥammad al-Madā‘ini.
The following list includes works cited in the notes. Most references are self-explanatory, citing page or volume/page of the work. Some biographical and geographical dictionaries that have an alphabetical arrangement (Ibn Ḥajar, Yāqūt) are cited sub verbo referring to the person or place in question, in order to facilitate reference to various editions.

The Assyrian Dictionary of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago. Chicago: The Oriental Institute, 1955–.

Bibliography of Cited Works

Tübinger Atlas des vorderen Orients. Wiesbaden: Dr. Ludwig Reichert Verlag, 1977–.

Wathimah b. Mūsā b. al-Furāt. Kitāb al-riddah, fragments edited by Wilhelm Hoenenbach as Waṭīma's Kitāb ar-Ridda aus Ibn Ḥaḡar's Iṣāba [= Akademie der Wissenschaft und der Literatur in Mainz. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, Jahrgang 1951, nr. 4]. A single number (e.g., “22”) refers to Hoenenbach’s introduction; a double number with slash (e.g., “7/42”) refers to the Arabic text and German translation, in that order.

Index

This index includes names of all persons, groups, and places mentioned in the text, as well as most such names mentioned in the footnotes. Entries refer to page numbers only. An asterisk (*) before an entry indicates individuals whose names occur in the isnâds, or chains of transmitters conveying the accounts making up the text. The Arabic definite article al- and the abbreviations b. (ibn, “son of”) and bt. (bint, “daughter of”) have been disregarded in alphabetizing entries.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Entry</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Abân</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abân b. Šâlîh</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abânân</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abâni, mountains of</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Abâriqi</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abbûd</td>
<td>152, 153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abbûd al-Nâjî</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-’Abbâs b. ’Abd al-Muṭṭalib</td>
<td>39, 45, 69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd, see ’Abbûd</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd b. al-Azwar al-Asadî</td>
<td>104</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd al-Dâr, clan of Quraysh</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd b. al-Julandâ</td>
<td>70</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd b. Mâlik b. Ḥudhayfah</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd Manât, section of al-Ri바b</td>
<td>87, 90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd Manât b. Kinânah, clan of Kinânah</td>
<td>47, 52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*’Abd al-Râhîm b. ’Abd al-’Azîz b. ’Abdallâh b. ’Uthmân b. Ḥunayf</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd al-Râhîm b. Abî al-’Ās</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd al-Râhîm b. Abî Bakr</td>
<td>116, 119, 123, 127</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*’Abd al-Râhîm b. Anas al-Sulâmî</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd al-Râhîm b. ’Awf</td>
<td>15, 50, 71, 192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*’Abd al-Râhîm b. Ka’b b. Mâlik</td>
<td>52, 55, 73</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*’Abd al-Râhîm b. Qays al-Sulâmî</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*’Abd al-Sâlâm b. Suwayd</td>
<td>64, 65</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abd Shams, clan of Quraysh</td>
<td>63, 69; see also Umayyah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abdâ’ah</td>
<td>180, 181</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>’Abdallâh, clan of Kalb</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*’Abdallâh b. al-’Abbâs</td>
<td>21, 190</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Abdallah b. 'Abd al-Rahmân b. Abi Amrah al-Ansârî 1, 4, 8
Abdallah b. Abî Bakr b. Abî Quhâfâh 39
Abdallah b. Abî Bakr b. 'Amr b. Hazm 39, 80, 81, 188
Abdallah b. al-Fadl b. al-'Abbâs b. Rabî’ah 120
Abdallah b. Fayruz al-Daylami 34
Abdallah b. Ghaṭafân 41
Abdallah b. Hadhaf 138, 144, 149
Abdallah b. Ha’s b. Ghânîm 121
Abdallah b. Laythi 47
Abdallah b. Mas’ûd 46, 50
Abdallah b. Muqarrin 48, 51
Abdallah b. al-Nawwâhâh 107
Abdallah b. Qays, see Abû Mûsâ
Abdallah b. Qays al-Jâshî 79
Abdallah b. Sâfâwân 87
Abdallah Sa’îd b. Thâbit b. al-Jîdh’ 52, 55, 73, 75, 106, 114, 121
Abdallah b. Thawr b. Aṣghar 172, 174
Abdallah b. ‘Umar 33, 120, 122
Abalâh b. Ka’b b. Ghawth, see al-Aswad
Abid, clan of Makhzûm-Quraysh 157
Abîl 17, 44
Abila 17
Abjar b. Bujayr, Abjar b. Jâbîr 144, 145
Ablutions 142
al-Abnâ’, clans of Sa’d b. Zaydmanât b. Tamîm 85-87, 89, 140 al-Abnâ’, descendents of Persian troops in Yemen 18, 21, 22, 24, 25, 28, 29, 53, 165-69, 172
al-Abraq 45, 57, 52, 160
'Abs, tribe of Ghaṭafân 41, 43, 44, 46, 47, 49, 51, 52, 60
Abû ‘Amr 14, 76
Abû ‘Amr, mawla of Ibrahim b. Talhah 19, 21
Abû ‘Amr b. al-‘Alâ’ 106
Abû Ayyûb 14
Abû Bakr b. Abdallah 39

Abû Bakr b. Kilâh, clan of Kilâb 78, 138
Abû Bakr b. Muḥammad al-Khuwâlî 8
Abû Baṣijâh al-Ansârî 126, 127
Abû ‘Damrah 14, 76
Abû al-Faṣîl 61, 65; see Abû Bakr “al-Siddîq”
Abû Ha’s, see ‘Umar b. al-Khâṭîb
Abû al-Ḥasan al-Madhînî, see al-Madhînî
Abû Ḥudhayfah b. Utbah b. Rabî’ah 103, 113, 115, 120, 121
Abû Hurayrah 143
Abû Hurayrah 114, 117, 118
Abû Ishâq al-Shayba’î 186
Abû Ja’far, see al-Ṭabarî
Abû Ma’shar 38, 39, 151
Abû Miḥjan al-Thaqâfî 39
Abû Mîkhnaf xvii, xviii, 1, 8, 63-65, 83
Abû Muḥammad 34
Abû Mûsâ al-Ash’âri 19, 20, 22, 158
Abû al-Qâsim al-Shanawi 33, 34
Abû Qatâdah, see al-Hârîth b. Rib’î
Abû Rabi’ah, clan of Shaybân-Bakr b. Wâ’il 148
Abû al-Sâ’îb ‘Atâ’ b. Fulân al-Makhzûmi 175
Abû Sa’îd 114
Abû Sha’îrah b. ‘Abîl ‘Uzza al-Sulâmî 81-83
Abû Sufyân b. Ḥarb 158
Abû al-Sumayt Ḥârîthah b. Surâqah b. Ma’dikarib 178, 179
Abû Thawr 171, see also ‘Amr b.
Ma’dikarib
Abû ’Ubaydah b. al-Jarrâh 3, 7
Abu 'Ubaydah b. Muhammad b. Abi 'Ubaydah 151
Abu 'Umayr 171; see also Farwah al-A'lab, 6z
Alhan b. Malik 27
Ali b. Abdallah b. al-Abbas 199
Abu'Uthman 10
'Ali b. Abi Talib 3, 10, 11, 14, 39, 71, 97, 113, 152
'Ali b. Muhammad al-Madâ'ini, see al-Madâ'ini alms, alms tax (sadaqah, zakât), see tax
'Alqamah b. Ulâthah 75, 76
al-'Amarradah 180, 181
'Amir 186
'Amir, tribe of 124
'Amir b. Hanifah, clan of Hanifah 126
'Amir b. Rabi'ah, tribe of 'Amir b.
Sha'â'ah 64
'Amir b. Sha'â'ah, tribe of xix, 42,
64, 65, 67, 70-72, 74-76, 79, 112-15, 169
'Amir b. Shahr al-Hamdâni 18-21, 27, 158
'Amirah b. Khufaf, clan of Sulaym 79
'Am'mân 17
'Amr, client of Abu Bakr 164
'Amr b. Abd al-Awâd 146
'Amr b. Abd al-Uzzâ 81
'Amr b. al-Ahtam, see 'Amr b. Sinân
'Amr b. al-'Asâ' 53, 70-72, 105, 136, 137, 139
'Amr b. Dinâr 39
'Amr b. al-Ḥakam 43, 44
'Amr b. Ḥazm 19, 20, 22, 158, 159
'Amr b. Junbâd, branch of 'Amr b.
Tamîm 171
'Amr b. Ma'dîkârib 24, 159, 169-74
'Amr b. Mu'âwiyyah, clan of Kindâh 177, 178, 180-82
'Amr b. Qays 18
'Amr b. Salâmah 169
'Amr b. Shu'ayb 70, 99, 125
'Amr b. Sinân "al-Ahtam" 96, 139
'Amr b. Tamîm, tribe of Tamîm 59,
88, 89, 91, 92, 108, 112, 139-41,
145, 146
'Amrah b. 'Abd al-Rahmân 39
Anas b. Mâlik 118-19
Index

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>'Anazah b. Asad b. Rabī‘ah</td>
<td>144, 155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-'Anbar b. Yarbu‘, clan of Tamim</td>
<td>89, 171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>angels</td>
<td>26, 57, 66, 150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Ans b. Mālik</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ansār (‘‘Helpers’’) [xI, xII, 1–7, 13, 15, 46, 57, 62, 63, 74, 99, 105, 116, 120, 122, 126, 128, 160, 180</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-'Ansi, see al-Aswad</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Ansur</td>
<td>62, 68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apostle of God, see Muḥammad b. Anbāllāh</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-'Aqabah</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Aqabah b. Hilāl</td>
<td>88, 90, 92, 96, 106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Aqra b. 'Aqabah</td>
<td>159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Aqra b. Hābīs</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Aqrābāh</td>
<td>112, 115, 128, 129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-'arab, see Arab</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arab, Arabs xix, xxii, 2, 4, 6, 13, 14, 27, 36, 40–42, 55, 59, 64, 71, 72, 83, 95, 102, 118, 137, 142, 150, 163, 171, 173, 189; see also nomads</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Arafāh</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Arfajah b. Harthamah al-Bānqi</td>
<td>54, 105, 152–55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Arin, clan of Yarbu‘-Tamim</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>arms, armor</td>
<td>2, 6, 9, 10, 16, 30, 34, 35, 37, 39, 48, 67, 79–83, 103, 104, 117–20, 123, 125, 127–32, 137, 141, 144, 145, 156, 159, 173, 179, 186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Asad, tribe of xix, 42, 44–46, 50, 52, 63, 65, 67–69, 73–76, 78, 99</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ash'ar, tribe of 20, 158, 161</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Ash‘ath b. Mi’nās al-Sakūnī</td>
<td>191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Ash‘ath b. Qays al-Kindi</td>
<td>177, 180, 182, 183–89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ashja’, tribe of 41, 42</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Āṣim, clan of Yarbu‘-Tamim</td>
<td>101</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Āṣim b. ‘Adī 4, 11</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Asīr 161; see also Sarāt</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aslām, tribe of 8</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asmā’ bt. al-Nu‘mān b. Aḥi al-Jaww</td>
<td>183, 190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Asmā‘ bt. ‘Umays 39</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Aswad al-Ansi, “false prophet” [xI, xII, 21–38, 41, 42, 53, 158, 159, 163, 169, 170, 173, 176, 177]</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Aṭā‘ al-Khurasānī 18</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Athā‘ith 162</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Ath’ath 162</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Athr 23</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Aṭiyāyah 14, 169</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Aṭiyāyah b. Bilāl 84</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Attāb b. Asīd 158, 160, 164, 192</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Awf b. al-Bilād b. Khālid</td>
<td>87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Awf b. Fulān b. Sīnān 45, 51</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>AWS, tribe of Medina 1, 8, 131</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aws b. Khuzaymah al-Hujaymi</td>
<td>91</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>āyāt (“signs” of God), see miracles</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Ayyalāh b. Ka‘b b. Ghawth, see al-Aswad</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Āzād 27</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Azd, tribe of 152, 153, 155, 161, 164, 171</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

B

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Page(s)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bādhām, Bādhan</td>
<td>18, 20, 34</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bādir, battle of 106</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Bādir b. al-Khalīl</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bahlārah</td>
<td>85, 87, 89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bahdalah b. ‘Awf, clan of Sa‘d-Tamim 85, 87, 89</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bāhilah</td>
<td>81</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bahrā‘, tribe of 17</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Bahrāyn</td>
<td>23, 54, 70, 134, 136–41, 147, 148, 151, 156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bajilah, tribe of 23, 159, 161, 164</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bakr [b. Sa‘d b. Dabbah], clan of Dabbah 90</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bakr, clan of Sakūn-Kindah 24</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bakr b. ‘Abdmanāt, clan of Kinānah 51</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bakr b. Wā’il, tribe of 88, 134, 137, 144, 146–49, 178</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bal-Hārith, see al-Hārith b. Ka‘b</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bal-Qayn, see al-Qayn
al-Baladhuri xx
al-Balansi xiv, xv, xx
Bali, tribe of 17, 139
al-Balqāʾ 11, 17
banners, battle standards 52–54, 98, 115, 116, 121, 123, 126 al-Baqiʾ 80
Baqiʾ al-Gharqad 80
al-Barāʾ b. Fulān 105
al-Barāʾ b. Mālik 105, 118, 119, 125
Barahūt 183
Bāriq, clan of al-Azd 161
Bāriq, clan of Khuzāʾah 54
Bashīr b. Saʿd 7–10
al-Baṣṭārah 74, 77, 78, 97, 137 al-Basrah 74, 77, 78, 97, 137 al-Basūs 178
Bāṭn Fālāb, see Falāb bishops 163
Bishr “al-Jārūd” b. al-Muʿalla, see al-Jārūd b. al-Muʿalla Bishr “al-Salīl” b. Qays 88, 90, 91
Bistām b. Qays 88 blood price, blood money, blood vengeance 49, 78, 91, 98, 102, 112–15 booty, division of booty 17, 44, 51, 59, 129, 130, 133, 145, 146, 148, 149, 152, 154, 156, 159, 163, 184–88; see also “fifth” Buʿath, battle of 8, 179
al-Buḍaydī 182
Bujayr b. Iyās b. ʿAbdallāh al-Sulami, see al-Fujāʾah Bushrā bt. Qays b. Abī al-Kaysam 190 al-Buṭāḥ xvi, 53, 60, 98–100, 105, 106, 139 al-Buṭūn [Kaʾb and ʿAmr clans of Tamim] 85–87, 140 al-Buẓākhah xvi, 52, 60–62, 64, 73, 74, 76, 77, 79 captives, captivity xv, xix, 17, 30, 57, 72–76, 78–80, 90–92, 102, 103, 113–17, 119, 126, 129–33, 145, 146, 148, 152, 154, 156, 174, 179, 182, 185–90
Cavalry 17, 23, 32–34, 44, 46, 54, 65, 72, 73, 79, 101, 106, 115, 127, 141, 147, 148, 153, 155, 159, 166, 169, 174, 183, 184; see also horses Christianity, Christians 14, 88, 93, 134, 163, 171; see also bishops, church, monks church, churches 163 clientage, clients [walaʾ, mawali] 115 conquests, Islamic xii, xiii, 3, 17, 38, 151, 156, 189 Cows 16, 28, 29
crops 108, 109
cultivated land [villages, oases, gardens, etc.] 12, 106, 108–12, 115, 116, 119, 125, 126, 129–32, 169; see also crops, grain
Dābah 54, 70, 153, 154, 156, 189
Dābah b. Udd, tribe of al-Ribāb 85, 87, 90, 91, 96, 98, 139
Dādhwāyḥ 21, 24, 26, 28, 32, 34, 36, 145, 165–67, 172, 174
*al-Ḍaḥhāk 14
*al-Ḍaḥhāk b. Fayruz 25, 34, 38
*al-Ḍaḥhāk b. Khalifiḥ 10, 191
*al-Ḍaḥhāk b. Yarbuʾ 123, 126, 132 al-Ḍahnaʾ 54, 89, 141, 147, 150 al-Dajānī 90
al-Dajjāl, see Nahār
Damrah b. Bakr, tribe of Kinānah 40
Ḍārim, clan of Tamīm 70, 85, 89, 90, 97
Ḍārin 138, 143, 146–48 dates 111, 112; see also palms, crops
Index

Daws, clan of al-Azd 153, 164
Daylam 168
al-Daylami, see Fayruz delgations 39, 40, 42, 45, 46, 48, 50, 69, 85, 90, 93, 96, 133, 181 deporation, see expulsion devil, see Satan
Dhât al-Khiyâm 157
dhimmah (protection) 131, 157, 163, 164, 192
Dhû Ḥusâ 46, 47, 51, 159
Dhû al-Kalâ', Samayfa' 27, 165, 166
Dhû al-Khalâsah 164
Dhû al-Khimár 26
Dhû al-Khimârayn 'Awf al-Jadhami 68
Dhû al-Marwah 17
Dhû Murrân, 'Umayr 27, 159, 165
Dhû Niyâf 165
Dhû al-Qâssah 40, 45, 47–52, 54, 60, 62, 159
Dhû al-Qiddah 40
Dhû Yanâf, Shahr 165
Dhû Zûd, Sa'id 27, 165
Dhû Zulaym, Hawshab 27, 165
Dhubyan, tribe of Ghatafan 41, 43, 47, 49, 51, 52, 60, 78 dialects xviii, 31, 101
al-Dîl, clan of 67
al-Dîl b. Bakr, clan of Kinânah 40, 41, 45
Ḍîrâr b. al-Azwar al-Asadi 67, 69, 101, 104, 128 Ditch, battle of, see al-Khandaq, near Medina al-Diyarbârî xiv, xx donkeys 147
Dubay'ah b. 'Ilíl, clan of Bakr b. Wâ'il 147 al-Dubayb, clan of Judhâm 44 al-Du'il b. Bakr, clan of Kinânah 41 al-Dûl, clan of Ḥanîfah 112
Dûmah, Dûmat al-Jandal 44, 98, 139
"Emigrants," see Muhâjirûn emigration, see hijrah.
Euphrates 88
expulsion, deportation 97, 106, 163, 166, 167, 169, 185
F
al-Fadl b. al-'Abbâs 39
Falj 74
Fârs 40
Farwâh b. Musayk 19, 24, 159, 169–71, 174 fasting 93
Fâtimah, daughter of the Prophet 3, 39, 113
Fâtimah bt. Rabi'ah b. Badr 77
Fayd 68
Fayruz al-Daylami 21, 24, 26–32, 34–37, 158, 165–67, 169, 172, 190
Fazârah, tribe of xix, 40, 41, 44, 54, 62, 65–67, 78, 84
“fifth” of booty 59, 154, 156, 157, 185, 188
Fihr b. Mâlik, tribe of (=QuRAYsh) 82; see also Quraysh Firûd b. al-'Ujayl 157 flocks 16, 41, 77, 100, 115, 127, 148, 154, 163, 182; see also camels, cows, goats, sheep fortresses, fortifications 94, 95, 126–32, 138, 144, 145, 151, 183 frankincense, see incense al-Fujâ‘ah Iyâs b. 'Abd Yalîl 79–81
'Fulân al-Makhzûmî 175
G
Gabriel 66 gardens, see cultivated land
Gerrha 137
Ghalâfâqah 23
al-Ghamr 73
Ghamm, clan of 78, 87
Ghanm b. 'Abdallah, clan of Ghaṭa fian 78, 87 al-Gharur, see al-Mundhir b. al-Nu'man al-Gharur b. Suwayd 138, 146; see also al-Mundhir b. al-Nu'man Ghassān, tribe of 44
*Ghassān b. 'Abd al-Hamid 38, 151
Ghaṭa fian, tribe of 40-42, 44-46, 54, 60, 64, 65, 67-69, 74-78, 99 al-Ghawth, clan of Ṭayyi’ 42, 60, 62, 68, 172
Ghaylān b. Kharashah 96
*Ghūsūn b. al-Qāsim 152
Ghūyaf b. 'Abdullāh, clan of Murād 189 goats 16, 109, 182
governor, governorship 18-21, 24, 33, 38, 53, 54, 67, 113, 158-60, 165, 173, 175-77, 180, 185, 190, 191; see also tax agent grain 109; see also crops
Gushnasp 25

H

*Ḥabīb b. Rabī‘ah al-Asadi 67
Hadas, tribe of 78
ḥadīth xvi, 17
Ḥadramawt 19-25, 53, 54, 105, 153, 157, 175-83, 190, 191
Ḥajar 23, 137, 143, 146, 150
ḥajj, see pilgrimage *al-Ḥajjāj 70
Ḥajj (al-Ḥajj) 54, 93, 129, 132
Ḥakamah b. Mālik b. Ḫudhayfah 77
Ḥamalāh b. Mālik b. Ḫudhayfah 77
Ḥamdān 20, 27, 28, 31, 158, 170
Ḥammām b. Murrah, clan of Shaybān 88 al-Ḥamqatayn 44, 53
Ḥamzah, uncle of the Prophet 39, 120
Ḥanifah, tribe of 87, 92, 93, 106, 107, 110-13, 115-21, 123, 125, 128, 131-33, 139, 189
Ḥanẓalāh b. Mālik, tribe of Tamim

Index
Index

Hind, clan of Kindah 183 al-Ḥirah 137, 138
al-Ḥirdah 23
*Hishām b. Muḥammad, see Ibn al-Kalbi
*Hishām b. 'Urwah 13, 17, 41, 60, 71, 102 horses 15, 34, 37, 51, 66, 73, 75, 82, 113, 130, 131, 145, 147, 149, 162, 163; see also cavalry hostage, hostages 33, 37, 38, 61, 114, 178 al-Ḥuṣayn b. al-Mundhir b. al-Jamūh 5–7, 10
al-Ḥudaybiyah 14
Ḥudbān b. Jadīmah, branch of Kinānāh 171
Ḥudhayfah b. Miḥṣan al-Ghalfānī 53, 62, 105, 152–55; see also 'Uyaynah Ḥudhayfah b. al-Yaman, see Hudhayfah b. Miḥṣan Hudhayl, tribe of 46
al-Ḥudhayl b. 'Imrān 88, 90, 92, 96, 106
Hujaym, clan of 'Amr-Tamim 91
Hujayr b. 'Umayr 107, 108
Hukaym b. 'Ayyāsh "al-A'war" al-Kalbī 96
Humaydah b. al-Nu'mān 161
Ḥunayn, battle of 81
al-Ḥusayn b. 'Ali b. Abī Ṭalīb 43 al-Ḥuṣayn b. Mālik b. Hudhayfah 77 al-Ḥuṣayn b. Niyār 87, 89
al-Ḥuṣayn b. Numayr 180 al-Ḥuṯām b. Dubay'ah 134, 137, 138, 143–46, 149, 151 al-Ḥuṯay'ah b. Aws 47, 51

I

Iblīs 57; see also Satan
*Ibn 'Abbās, see 'Abdallāh b. al-'Abbās
Ibn al-‘Athīr xx, xxi
*Ibn Ḥamrāh 11

*Ibn Ḥumayd 65, 72, 80, 81, 83, 103, 116, 117, 120, 126, 129, 133, 136, 151, 188
*Ibn Hurayrah 131
*Ibn Isḥāq, Muḥammad xvii, 39, 65, 72, 80, 81, 83, 103, 116, 117, 120, 121, 125, 126, 129, 133, 136, 151, 188
*Ibn Jurayj 39
*Ibn Mubayriz 152, 171
Ibn Sa'd al-Zuhri, see 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa'd
Ibn Sāliḥ 181
*Ibn Sirin 76
*Ibn 'Umar, see 'Abdallāh b. 'Umar
'Ijl, tribe of 144
*Ikrimah 21, 114, 131, 158, 172
Iīlyā' (Jerusalem) 97
Imrū' al-Qays b. 'Abīs al-Kindī 181
Imrū' al-Qays b. 'Adī b. Aws 43
Imrū' al-Qays b. al-Asbāgh al-Kalbī 43
Imrū' al-Qays b. Bilād 43
Imrū' al-Qays b. Fulān 43 incense 157 infantry 147, 148 inheritance 136
iqāmah (second call to prayer) 100–2, 107; see also adhān
Iran xii
Iraq 40, 44, 53, 73, 74, 88, 89, 97, 139, 151, 168 al-'Irād 132, 133
*Ishāq 39
*Ishāq b. 'Abdallāh 39
'Iṣmā'īl b. Umayr 87
*Ismā'īl b. Muslim 134, 137
Iṣṭakhr 115
Iyād, battle of 148
Iyād, tribe of 88
'Iyād b. Bishr 118
'Iyādī, see 'Abbād
Iyās b. 'Abd Yalil, see al-Fujā'ah
Iyās b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd Yalil b. 'Umayrah b. Khufāf, see al-Fujā'ah

J

*Ja'bir 11
*Ja'bir b. Fulān 106
*Ja'bir b. Yazīd 38
Jahrimah, clan of Asad 68
Jadilah, tribe of Ṭayyī' 42, 60, 62, 68
Ja'far, clan of Yarbū'-Tamīm 101
Ja'far b. Abī Ṭalīb 39
"al-Jafūl," see Mālik b. Nuwayrah Jaḥdām 186
jāhiliyyah 10, 58, 68, 136, 152, 171, 189
Jalās 78
Jāmād 180, 181
al-Jānād 20, 21, 23, 33, 158, 186, 190
Jānī 23
Jarīr b. Ḥabīlāh 159, 164, 174
Jarm, tribe of Qudā'ah 17, 154, 155 al-Jārud b. Abī al-Muʿalla 134, 135, 137, 143
Jās 78
Jāsī 78
Jassās b. Ṭamīm b. Abī Sūsā'ah 64, 75 al-Jawf 44, 139; see also Dūmah
Jaww, al-Jaww 54, 139
Jaww Murāmur 82
Jaww Qurāqir 82
Jayfūr 70, 152, 153
Jayrūt 155, 157
Jayzān, see Jazān
Jazān (Jayzān, Jazān) 23, 44
al-Jazīrāh 89, 91, 92, 96–98
Jerusalem (Aelia Capitolina, Ilīyā') 97 Jews, Judaism 14, 178
jihād 2, 65, 129, 177
jinn 9, 57
Jishnas (Jishnas), see Jushaysh

al-Jiwā' 79, 82
Jīzān, see Jazān
Jordan (al-Urdunn) 180
Jubaylah Huja' (or Hujūm) 113
Jubayr b. Mu'īm 119–20
Jūdayd b. Ḥadīr, clan of Daws-al-Azīd 153
*Jūdayl b. Khabbāb al-Nabhānī 64 judge, judgeship 163, 192
Judgment, Day of 12, 24, 118
Judhām, tribe of 44
Juhaynah, tribe of 17
al-Julandā b. al-Mustakīr 70, 152
Jumāh, clan of Quraysh 54
Jundāb b. Sulmā' (or Salmā') 160
Jurāshah b. Mālik b. Ḥudhayfah 77
Jurtah b. Usayyid 108
al-Jurf 11, 17
Jūsham b. ‘Awf, clan of Sa'd-Tamīm 87
*Jūshaysh b. al-Daylamī 25, 26, 165, 166 al-Jūshīyyah 66
Jusnās, see Jushaysh
Juwāthā 138
*Jūwayriyyah b. Asmā' 38, 39, 151
Juwayy b. Jurwāh 108

K

Ka'b b. Rabī'ah, tribe of 'Āmir b. Ša'ṣa'ah 64, 75
Kāhil [b. Asad?] 79
Kalb b. Wabarāh, tribe of 17, 40, 43, 74, 96, 139
*al-Kalbī, Muḥammad b. al-Sā'ib 95, 112
*Kāthīr b. al-Salt 175, 177, 186
Khāḍīm b. al-Afīr b. Tamīm 85, 87, 89
Khadijah, first wife of the Prophet 19
Khālid b. al-'Āṣ b. Hishām b. al-Mughirah 113
Khālid b. Asid 160, 165
Khālid b. Fulān al-Makhzūmī 113, 183
Khālid b. Sa‘īd b. al-‘Āṣ 19, 20, 22, 53, 158, 159, 173
Khālil 44
Khāmīr 162
Khamīs Mushayt 23
al-Khandaq, near Medina 62
al-Khandaq, place in Yemen 186 al-Khansā‘ 81
Kharāj, see tax
Khārijah b. Ḥīṣn al-Fazārī 40, 41
Khulāsa’ah b. ‘Umayr, see Khufāf b. Nudbah
Khulayd b. Zufar al-Nāmārī 112
Khurāshah b. Malik b. Hudhayfah 77
Khusraw Anūshirwān 18; see also Kisrā
al-Kuṭayl b. Aws 47
Khuza‘ah, tribe of 8, 54, 160
‘Khuzyamah b. Shajarah al-‘Uqfānī 100, 103
Kīlāb b. Rabī‘ah, tribe of ‘Āmir b. Ṣa‘ṣa‘āh 64, 75, 138
Kīnānah, tribe of 40, 45, 101, 158, 160
Kīnānah b. ‘Awf, branch of Kalb 96
Kindah, tribe of xix, 19, 53, 175–77, 181–84, 189, 190
Kisrā 168; see also Khusraw Anūshirwān al-Kūfah 19, 44, 97, 173
Index 209

Mālik b. Sa’d, clan of Zaydmanat-Tamim 183
Ma’mar 147, 151
Ma’n b. Ḥājiz (or Ḥājir) 54, 81
Manzūr b. Zabbān b. Sayyār 41
Ma’rīb 20, 22, 23, 158, 177, 182, 190 al-Marr 157
marriage 24, 34, 94, 95, 104, 113, 115, 119, 131, 133, 173, 185, 186, 190
Marthad 172
Māsqūq al-‘Akkī 162, 163, 170(?), 172
Māsqūq b. Dhi al-Ḫarb al-Hamdānī al-Arhabi 162; see also Masruq al-‘Akkī mawlid, mawāli, see clientage
Maymūnah bt. al-Ḫarith, wife of the Prophet 39
Mayyāh 82
Māzin b. Malik, clan of ‘Amr b. Tamim 89, 92
Mecca xi, 10, 24, 44, 45, 70, 74, 77, 82, 83, 113, 120, 158, 160, 165, 173, 177, 180; conquest of 19, 42, 53, 75, 97, 158, 160
Mesopotamia xii
Mikhwaṣ 180, 181
*Mīnjāb b. Rāshid 139 miracles (signs of God, etc.) xvi, 33, 67, 110, 111, 141–43, 147, 148, 150
Mishraḥ 180, 181
Mīsmā’ b. Shaybān 146
al-Miswar b. ‘Amr 164
Mithqab 74
monks 16, 150, 163
mosques 46, 104
Mu’ādh b. Jabal 19, 20, 22, 24, 25, 33, 34, 158, 192
Mu’āwiyyah, leader of Banū ‘Uqayl 169
Mu’āwiyyah b. Abī Sufyān 97, 158
Mu’āwiyyah b. Anas 159
Mu’āwiyyah b. Fūlān al-Wā’lī 43
Mu’āwiyyah b. Kindah, tribe of 20, 179, 180
Mu’āwiyyah b. Mālik b. Ḥudhayfah 77
Mu’āwiyyah b. Qays al-Janjī 23
Mu’āwiyyah al-‘Udhri 44
*Mubāshshir b. al-Fudayl 11, 121, 122
Mudār 96, 112
Mudlij b. Murrah, branch of Kinānah 45, 160, 161 al-Mufawwur 32
al-Mughirah (branch of Makhzūm-Quraysh) 184
*al-Mughirah b. al-Akhnas 17–18
al-Mughirah b. Shu’bāh 185, 187
Muhājirūn ("Emigrants") xi, xix, 1, 3–5, 7, 11, 15, 57, 106, 115, 122, 123, 128, 160 al-Muḥakkam b. al-Ṭufayl al-Ḫānafi ("Muḥakkam al-Yamāmah") 113, 116, 119, 123, 125, 126
Muhāhil b. Zayd 68
*Muḥammad b. Iṣḥāq, see Ibn Iṣḥāq
*Muḥammad b. Marzuq 83
*Muḥammad b. Ṭalhā b. Yazīd b. Rukānah 65, 72
Māhārib, tribe of 156
*al-Muhill b. Khalīfah 64
*al-Mujālid b. Saʿīd 41, 186
Mujījāʾ b. Murārah 112–16, 118, 120, 121, 126–33
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>mules</th>
<th>147, 173</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>al-Mundhir III, king of al-Ḥirah</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Mundhir b. al-Nu‘mān b. al-Mundhir, called “al-Gharrūr”</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Mundhir b. Sāwī</td>
<td>70, 134, 136, 138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Mundhir b. Suwayd b. al-Mundhir</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muqā‘is, clans of Tamim</td>
<td>85–87, 140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murād, clan of Madḥhij</td>
<td>23, 24, 159, 170, 189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murāmūr</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Murr</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Murrah, clan of Dhubyān</td>
<td>41, 44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Mūsā</td>
<td>173, 174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Mūsā b. al-Ghusn</td>
<td>171</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Mūsā al-Jalyūsī</td>
<td>152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*Mūsā b. ‘Uqba</td>
<td>17, 191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Muṣabbāh</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Muṣayyakh</td>
<td>151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*al-Muṣṭanir b. Yazid</td>
<td>25, 33, 165, 173, 174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muʿthah</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mutammim b. Nuwayrah</td>
<td>102, 103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Muthannā b. Ḥārithah al-Shaybānī</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muzaynah, tribe of</td>
<td>48</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>myrrh, see incense</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

N

Nabḥān, branch of al-Ghwath-Ṭayyi’ | 64 |
| Naḍāḍūn | 155 |
| Naḥī | 76 |
| Nafūd | 62 |
| Nahd b. Zayd, tribe of | 17, 189 |
| Nāʿir | 79 |
| Najabah b. Abi al-Maythā | 79, 80 |
| Najd | 40, 41, 52, 61, 62, 81, 89, 139, 155, 156 |
| Naṣījah, tribe of Jarm | 154, 155, 171 |
| al-Najjār, clan of Khazraj | 19 |
| Najrān | 18, 20, 22, 27, 33, 34, 158, 159, 163, 164, 169, 174, 176 |
| al-Nakha’ b. ‘Amr, tribe of Madḥhij | 39, 171, 172 |
| al-Namir b. Qāṣīt, tribe of Rabī’ah | 88, 149 |
| al-Naq’ | 74 |
| Nāṣir b. Muʿāwiyyah, clan of Hawāzin | 158 |
| Naṣr b. Qu‘ayn, clan of | 73 |
| al-Nawār, wife of Ṭulayhah | 66 |
| Nawfal, clan of Quraysh | 19, 120 |
| Nawfal b. Muʿāwiyyah al-Dīlī | 40, 41 |
| al-Niḫāj | 49, 91 |
| al-Niḫājān | 49 |
| Nimr b. Jurwah | 108 |
| Nizār | 96 |
| nomads, bedouins | xix, xxi, 42, 59, 70, 85, 92, 106, 109, 116, 118, 134, 137, 155, 158, 173, 189; see also Arab, people of the desert |
| al-Nuḥayr | 183–87, 191 |
| Nukhba | 79 |
| al-Nu‘mān b. Bashīr | 7 |
| al-Nu‘mān b. al-Jawn | 190 |
| al-Nu‘mān “Mafrūq” b. ‘Amr | 148 |
| al-Nu‘mān b. al-Mundhir, king of al-Ḥirah | 137, 138 |
| al-Nu‘mān b. Muqarrin | 48, 49, 51 |
| Numārāh b. Jurwah | 108 |
| Numayr, tribe of | 64, 115 |
| Numayr b. Usayyid | 112 |
| al-Nuqrah | 82 |
| al-Nuwayri | xxi |

O

Oman, see ‘Uman | 15 |

P

Palestine | 34, 98 |
Index

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Term</th>
<th>Page Numbers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>palms</td>
<td>109-12, 129, 149, 168; see also dates</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>paradise</td>
<td>13, 16, 17, 63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>people of the desert</td>
<td>122, 123; see also nomads, Arab</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>people of the settlements</td>
<td>see settled people</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Persian Gulf</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>pilgrimage (hajj, 'umrah)</td>
<td>10, 18, 19, 44, 70, 74, 192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>plague</td>
<td>16, 17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>police (shurtah)</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prayer</td>
<td>xii, 7, 10, 24, 32-34, 39, 40, 45, 69, 93, 101-3, 142, 150, 158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>prisoners</td>
<td>see captives</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>protection</td>
<td>see dhimmah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qahdham</td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Qa'qā' b. 'Amr b. Mālik</td>
<td>75, 90, 97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Qa'qā' b. Ma'bad</td>
<td>90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Qārā'</td>
<td>139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>*al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad</td>
<td>44, 52, 60, 99, 105, 127, 152, 158, 171, 176</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qastal</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qaṭīf</td>
<td>134, 137, 138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qaṭīrah b. Ḥāritah, branch of Sakūn-Kindah</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Qayn (Bal-Qayn), tribe of</td>
<td>17, 43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qays b. 'Āṣim</td>
<td>49, 85, 86, 90, 91, 140, 145, 147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qays b. 'Aylān, tribe of</td>
<td>65, 74, 156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qays b. Ḥubayra, see Qays b.</td>
<td>'Abd Yaghūth</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qays b. Makshūḥ (al-Makshūḥ), see Qays b. 'Abd Yaghūth</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qays b. Mālik b. Hudhayfah</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qays b. Tha'lābah, tribe of Bakr b.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wā'll</td>
<td>133, 134, 137, 144-46, 149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qirdim</td>
<td>see Firdim</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qirfah b. Mālik b. Ḥudhayfah</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qudā'ah, tribe of</td>
<td>17, 43, 44, 53, 54, 69, 74, 105, 139, 154, 189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qudā'ī b. 'Amr</td>
<td>69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qur'ān</td>
<td>73, 81, 96, 107, 115-17, 121, 136, 148, 158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qurāqir</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quraysh, tribe of</td>
<td>1, 3, 7, 8, 15, 41, 46, 63, 68, 70, 71, 82, 86, 93, 105, 133, 141, 156, 158, 160, 161, 173, 190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quraysh al-Bīḥāb</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Qurayyah</td>
<td>132, 133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qurayzah, tribe of</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Qurūdūdah</td>
<td>68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qurrah b. Hubayrah b. Salamah b.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qushayr</td>
<td>70-72, 75-77, 79</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qurrān</td>
<td>139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Qushayr, tribe of Ka'b b. Rabi'ah</td>
<td>70, 75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Rabadhah</td>
<td>40, 41, 45, 46, 51, 52</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rabi'ah b. Bujayr al-Taghlibi</td>
<td>151, 152</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rabi'ah b. Fulān b. Badr</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rabi'ah al-Ḥadramī</td>
<td>183</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rabi'ah b. Nizār</td>
<td>87, 96, 112, 136, 137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Rahjāl</td>
<td>see Nahār</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Rahmān</td>
<td>109, 111, 112, 138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>raiding, raids</td>
<td>11, 15, 17, 44, 46, 48, 75, 79, 89, 90, 92, 100-3, 109, 112, 115, 133, 175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Rajjāl, see Nahār</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramlah</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ransom</td>
<td>47, 57, 189, 190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rāṣib, tribe of Jarm</td>
<td>155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Razm, day of</td>
<td>170</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>recruitment</td>
<td>59, 61, 62, 164, 191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>reserved pasture (mahjar, himā)</td>
<td>51, 180–83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>retaliation, see blood price</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Ribāb confederation</td>
<td>85-87, 89-91, 96, 139-41, 146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rijām</td>
<td>153</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rima’</td>
<td>20, 158</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ritual purity</td>
<td>142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Riyāḍ</td>
<td>177-79</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Index

Riyād al-Rawdah (Riyādat al-Rawdah) 156, 177
Riyāh, clan of Yarbū'-Tamīm 95

S
*al-Ṣā'ī b. ‘Aṭiyyah b. Bilāl 84, 98, 139 Sabābujah 137
al-Ṣabarāt 157
Sabrah b. Amr 85, 87, 89
sacred enclave, see haram
Sa’d b. Abī Waqqāṣ 50, 71, 190
Sa’d Allāh, clan of Balī 139
Sa’d al-‘Ashirah, tribe of Madhīj 170
Sa’d Hudhaym b. Zayd, tribe of 17, 43, 139, 155, 171
Sa’d b. Mālik, see Sa’d b. Abī Waqqāṣ
*Sa’d b. Mūjāhid 63, 64
Sa’d b. ‘Ubbadah 1–3, 8–11
Sa’d b. Zayd, see Sa’d b. Zaydmanat, Sa’d Hudhaym Sa’d b. Zaydmanat, tribe of Tamīm 50, 85, 86, 91, 139, 141, 155, 171 ṣadāqaḥ, see tax
al-Ṣadīf 54
Ṣafwān b. Šafwān 50, 85–87
Ṣahīd, see Ṣayyād
*Sahl b. Yūsuf 10, 18, 21, 38, 44, 52, 60, 73, 75, 77, 79, 83, 99, 105, 122, 127, 128, 130, 152, 158, 171, 175–77
Ṣahm, clan of Quraysh 53
Ṣahm b. Jurwāh 108
*Sahm b. Minjiwāb 84, 139 al-Ṣā‘ib 157
*Sa‘īd b. Abī Burdah 186
Sa‘īd b. al-Aqīb Dhū Zūd, see Dhū Zūd
Sa‘īd b. al-‘Aṣ the Elder 173
Sa‘īd b. al-‘Aṣ the Younger 173
Sā‘īdah b. Ka‘b, clan of Khazraj 1, 3
Ṣa‘īb b. al-Ḥārith b. Suwayd 84, 87–98, 106 al-Sakāsik, tribe of Kindah 19, 20, 22, 175, 181–83, 190 al-Sakūn, tribe of Kindah 19, 20, 22, 24, 25, 175, 176, 178–81, 183, 184

*Salamah 65, 72, 80, 81, 83, 103, 116, 117, 120, 126, 129, 133, 136, 151, 158
Salamah, brother of Ţulayyah 63, 73
Salamah b. Salamah b. Waqsh 131
Salamah b. ‘Umayr al-Ḥanafi 130–32
ṣalāt, see prayer
Ṣalih, tribe of 17
al-Salīl b. Qays, see Bishr ‘al-Salīl’ al-Salīlah 41
Ṣālim, mawālā of Abū Ḥudhayfah 115, 121
*Ṣālim b. ‘Abdāllāh 121, 122
Ṣalimah, clan of Anṣār 103
Ṣalīt b. Amr b. ‘Abd Shams al-ʿĀmirī 106
Salma, Mt. 44, 49, 60, 64, 68
Salma b. Rabi‘ah b. Fulān b. Badr, Umm Ziml 77–79, 82
*al-Ṣalt 175
Samā‘ah [b. Amr] 90, 98
Samayfa’ b. Nākūr Dhū al-Kalā’, see Dhū al-Kalā’
Ṣamīra’ 44, 52, 67
Ṣan‘a’ 20, 22–24, 27, 29, 33–35, 158, 159, 166–69, 172, 174, 175, 177 ṣaqīfah (‘portico’/episode [election of Abū Bakr]) xi, xii, xiv, 1–18
Ṣārat mountains 24, 161, 164
Ṣāriyāh b. ‘Amīr 116
Ṣāriyāh b. Maslamah b. ‘Āmir 116
Ṣasanians, Sasanian dynasty 18, 40, 153
Satan (devil, devils) 12, 26, 28, 31, 32, 34, 35, 37, 57, 58, 114, 121, 124, 147; see also Iblīs Sayābijah 137
al-Ṣaydā', clan of Asad 67
Sayhad 22, 177, 182
Sayḥān b. Jurwah 108
Sayḥān b. Sūhān 154 settled people xix, 109, 122, 123, 130, 134, 139, 158, 170
Shabath b. Rib'i al-Riyāḥī 95, 96
Shahr b. Bādhām 18, 20–24, 27
Shahr Dhu Yanāf, see Dhu Yanāf
Shahrān 162
Shakhrit 155–57
Shakrat, tribe of 155
Shamām 81
Shammār, Jabal 61
Shannūq, branch of Kinānah 160
Shanū'ah 61
Shaqiq sands 44, 62
al-Sharabbāh 40, 41, 46
Sharid b. Riyāḥ, clan of Sulaym 79–81
Sharik b. Mālik b. Ḥudhayfah 77 al-Sharjah 23
Sha'ūb 22
Shawrān, Ḥarrat 83, 84
Shaybān b. Ṭha'labah, tribe of Bakr b. Wā'il 88, 146, 148, 149, 151
Shayṭān b. Ḥuṣayn 43
Shurjih, see Zuhur 213
Shurahbil b. Ḥasanah 54, 92, 98, 105, 106, 113, 139, 152, 153
Shurahbil b. al-Simṭ al-Kindī 180, 181
Shuryaf b. Jurwah 108 shurṭah, see police
"signs" (dīyāt), see miracles
al-Simṭ b. al-Aswād al-Kindī 180 al-Simṭ b. Shurahbil b. al-Simṭ al-Kindī 181
Sinān b. Abī Sinān b. Miḥṣan al-Asadi 69
Sinān al-Ḍamri 40
Si'r b. Khulāf 87
slave, slaves 115, 119, 120, 126, 130, 131
Spices 60, 73
Subay', Banū 45
Ṣuhār 70, 153
Suhayl b. 'Amr 106
Suhaym b. Murrah, branch of Ḥanīfah 123, 139
Sukaynah bt. al-Ḥusayn 43
Sulaym b. Mansūr, tribe of Qays xix, 42, 54, 65, 67, 75–81, 83, 111, 159
*Sulaymān b. Yasār 120
Sumayrā' 44
Sumayrah 44
al-Sunḥ 61
*Suwayd b. al-Math'abah al-Riyāḥī 100, 103
Suwayd b. Muqarrin 48, 51, 54
Syria xii, 3, 11, 17, 22, 40, 53, 67, 73, 97, 129, 151, 159, 189
Tābah 44
Tabālah 164
*al-Ṭabari, Muhammad b. Jarir xi–xxi, 18, 39, 40, 53, 67, 78, 80, 94, 100, 117, 134, 136, 151, 158, 161, 163, 165, 172, 175, 185, 188
Tabūk 40, 175, 180
Taghlib b. Wā'il, tribe of 88, 91, 93, 97, 149, 151, 178
Index

al-Ṭāhir b. Abī Hālah 19, 20, 22, 158, 162, 163, 172

tahnik 111

al-Ṭā'if 23, 24, 39, 75, 158, 161, 174, 185

Ṭalḥah b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Abī Bakr al-Ṣiddiq 103

Ṭalḥah b. al-ʿAḥām 23, 24, 39, 75, 158, 161, 174, 185

Ṭalḥah b. Abī Bakr al-Ṣiddiq 103

Talhah b. Abī Bakr b. 'Abd al-Rahman b. Abī Bakr al-Siddiq 103

Talhah b. al-Aʿlam 114, 120, 122, 125, 126, 131, 158

Ṭalḥah b. 'Ubaydallāh 46, 71, 98

Tamīm b. Mūr, tribe of xiv, xv, xvii, xix, 19, 49, 70, 84–91, 95–97, 106, 107, 109, 112–14, 139, 153

Ṭanūkh, tribe of 17

al-Ṭatār 81

Tathlīth, Wādī 170

tax, taxes, taxation (including sadqah, zakāt, tribute) xii, 12, 19, 40–42, 45, 50–53, 69–72, 78, 81, 83, 85, 86, 90, 96–98, 100, 106, 109, 136, 140, 141, 158, 163, 170, 176–78, 180 tax agent, tax collector xiv, xix, 43, 50, 52, 53, 67, 69, 70, 81, 84–86, 97, 102, 170, 177; see also governor

Ṭaym, clan of Quraysh 46

Ṭaym b. 'Abd Manāt, tribe of al-Ribāb 85, 87, 91

Ṭaymallāt b. Tha'labah, tribe of Bakr 144, 146

Ṭhābit b. Ḥ̄a[q]ram 63, 64, 74

Ṭhābit b. Qays b. Shammās 62, 105, 116, 118, 121, 122, 128

Ṭhla'abah b. Sa'd, clan of Dhubyān 41, 45, 51

Ṭhla'abah b. Sa'd b. Ḍabbah, tribe of al-Ribāb 90

Ṭhla'abah b. Yarbu', tribe of al-Ribāb 90

Ṭhaqīf, tribe of 39, 41, 42, 158

Ṭhawr b. 'Abd Manāt b. Uḍd, tribe of al-Ribāb 85

Thumāmah b. Aws b. Lām al-Ṭā'ī 68

Thumāmah b. Uṭḥāl al-Ḥanafī 87, 93, 106, 107, 139, 146, 149

Ṭibah 44

Ṭhāmah 22–24, 160, 161, 173

Ṭransjordan 44, 78

treaty, treaties 21, 58, 92, 96, 126, 129, 132, 163, 185, 192; see also truce tribute, see tax

truce 14, 127, 129–31; see also treaty

Ṭulayḥah b. Khuyaylūd al-Asādī xi, 41, 42, 45, 52, 53, 60–63, 65–69, 73, 74

Ṭumādır bt. 'Amr [al-Khansā'] 81

Ṭurayfah b. Ḥājīz [or Ḥājīr] 54, 79–81

Ṭuwayq, Jabal 169

U

Ubād 134

'Ubādah b. Qurṣ b. 'Ubādah b. Qurṣ al-Laythī 19

'Ubayd, clan of Yarbu'-Tamim 101

'Ubayd b. Ṣakhir b. Lawdhān al-Anṣārī al-Salmī 18, 21, 38

'Ubayd b. Tha'labah b. Yarbu', clan of Ḥanīfah 116

'Ubayd b. Ḫumayr 107, 112, 120, 122

'Ubaydah b. Sa'd 177, 190

'Ubaydallāh b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Utbah 65, 72

'Ubaydallāh b. Ḫushaysh b. al-Daylāmi 25

'Ubaydallāh b. Sa'd al-Zuhrī 10, 11, 13, 14, 17–19, 21, 25, 28, 33, 34, 38, 41, 43, 60, 67, 134, 137

'Ubaydallāh b. Sa'id, see 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa'd

'Ubdah al-Hujaymī 92

Ubnā 17

'Udhrah, tribe of 17

Uḥd, Mt. 114, 118, 120

'Ukkāshah b. Mīḥān 63, 64, 74, 175

'Ukkāshah b. Ḥawwār b. Asghar al-
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Index</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ghawthi</td>
<td>19, 20, 175, 176</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Ukl [b. 'Abd Manāt], tribe of al-Ribāb</td>
<td>85, 86</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Ulayb</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Ulūm al-Muḥāribī</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uman [Oman]</td>
<td>17, 23, 53, 54, 70, 71, 105, 136, 137, 139, 151-55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umar b. al-Khāṭīb</td>
<td>xv, 3, 4, 6-11, 14-17, 19, 53, 70, 71, 74, 83, 84, 98, 101, 102, 104, 105, 107, 113, 122, 131, 133, 180, 189, 190, 192</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umar b. Sa'd b. Malik</td>
<td>190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umar b. Shabbah</td>
<td>38</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umar b. Ṭāliḥah al-Namārī</td>
<td>112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umārah b. Fulān al-Asadi</td>
<td>67</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umayr b. Aflāh Dhū Murrān, see Dhū Murrān</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Umayr b. Fulān al-Abdi</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umayyah, clan of Quraysh</td>
<td>19, 63, 69, 105, 158, 173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm Farwah bt. Abī Qubah</td>
<td>188, 189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm al-Haytham</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm Mutammim, see Umm Tamim</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm Qīfrah</td>
<td>77, 78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm Salamah, wife of the Prophet</td>
<td>175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm Tamim bt. al-Minhāl</td>
<td>101, 102, 116-18, 120</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umm Ziml, see Salmā bt. Rabi'ah</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umarah, see pilgrimage</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uqayl b. [Ka'b b.] Rabi'ah, tribe of 'Amīr b. Sa'ā'ah</td>
<td>169</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uqfān b. Suwayd, clan of Yarbū'-Tamim</td>
<td>97</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Uṣdūn</td>
<td>180</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uruk</td>
<td>64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Urwah b. Ghāziyyah al-Dāthnī</td>
<td>25, 34, 38, 165, 173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Urwah b. al-Zubayr</td>
<td>39, 71, 102</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Usāmah b. Zayd</td>
<td>xix, 11, 13-17, 38, 40, 41, 43, 50, 52, 62, 69, 159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Usayd b. Ḥudayr</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Usayyid, clan of 'Aṭr-Tamim</td>
<td>107-9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭārid b. Ḥājib</td>
<td>89, 95, 96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭaybah b. al-Nahhās</td>
<td>146</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭal al-Ḥanāfi</td>
<td>107</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭmān b. Abī al-'Āṣ</td>
<td>158, 160, 161, 164</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭmān b. 'Affān</td>
<td>71, 92, 113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭmān b. Rabi'ah</td>
<td>161</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uṭmān b. Suwayd</td>
<td>100, 103</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uwal</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Uwaym (or Uwaymir) b. Sā'idah</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'Uyaynah b. Ḥiṣn al-Fazārī</td>
<td>xvi, 53, 54, 62, 65-68, 72, 77; see also Ḥudhayfah b. Mihṣan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-'Uz̲alah, day of</td>
<td>148</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>vengeance, see blood price</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>——</td>
<td>——</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Wabar</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wabar, clan of (?)</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wabarah [Wabrah]</td>
<td>134</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wabr b. Yuḥannūs al-Azdī</td>
<td>26, 33, 34, 37, 159</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāḍī Ḥanifah</td>
<td>132</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāḍī al-Qurā</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāḍī'ah al-Kalbi</td>
<td>43, 44, 53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wahh, man of Ḍubay'ah b.'Il</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wā̲îl b. Ḥuṣr al-Ḥadrāmī</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wā̲i' b. Mālik</td>
<td>85, 89-91, 98, 139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāh'ah, clan of Kindah</td>
<td>176, 177, 180, 187</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>al-Wāqīdī, Muḥammad b. 'Umar</td>
<td>39</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāridāt</td>
<td>67</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāshih b. Ḥārīb</td>
<td>116, 119, 120, 125, 126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wāṣīt</td>
<td>74</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wattād [Ziyād!] b. Fulān</td>
<td>88, 96, 106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>weapons, see arms</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>women</td>
<td>16, 24, 27, 30-32, 34, 36, 37, 39, 57, 66, 75, 77-79, 87-97, 104, 109-11, 113, 115-17, 120, 127, 128, 130-33, 152, 154, 156, 163, 166, 168, 185, 186-92</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Y

Yaghūth 170
Ya‘lā b. Umayyah 19, 20, 158
Yan‘āb 157
‘Ya‘qūb [uncle of 'Ubaydallah b. Sa‘d] 11
‘Ya‘qūb b. Ibrāhīm 134
‘Yarbū’ [father of al-Ḍāḥḥāk b. Yarbū‘] 123, 126[?], 132
Yarbū‘, clan of Ḥanīfah 116
Yarbū‘, tribe of Tamīm 53, 85, 87, 89, 95, 100
Yashkur, tribe of Bakr b. Wā’il 133
Yazdagard [III], last Sasanian emperor 40
Yazid b. al-Afkal al-Azdi 23
Yazid b. Ḥusayn al-Ḥārithi 23
‘Yazid b. `Iyād b. Ju‘dubah 38, 151
Yazid b. M. Ḥirr 23
Yazid (I) b. Mu‘āwiyyah, Umayyad caliph 180
Yazid b. Qanān 183
Yemen xix, 18–24, 31, 34, 39, 41, 42, 53, 54, 105, 129, 151, 153, 158–92
‘Yūsuf (father of Sahl b. Yūsuf) 177
Yūsuf b. 'Umar al-Thaqafi 55

Z

Zabid 20, 158
Zafar 77, 78, 99
zakāt, see tax
Zankil, clan of 24
Zarūd 40, 44
‘Zayd b. Aslam 43
Zayd al-Ḍallāl 147, 151
Zayd b. Ḥārithah 17, 40, 113
Zayd b. al-Khaṭṭāb 105, 113, 118, 120–23
Zayd al-Khayl 149
Zaydmanāt b. Tamim, tribe of Tamīm 183 al-Zibriqān b. Badr 50, 85, 86, 95–97, 140
Ziml b. Mālik b. Ḥudhayfah 77
Ziyād b. Dīnār 184
Ziyād b. Fūlān (?), see Wattād
‘Ziyād b. Ḥānẓalāh al-Tamīmī 49, 52
Ziyād b. Labīd al-Bayāḍī 19–21, 175–82, 190, 191
Zizā‘ 17
Zubayd, clan of Madḥḥiij 24, 170
al-Zubayr b. al-Aw‘wām 10, 11, 46, 71
Zufar b. Mālik b. Ḥudhayfah 77
Zuhrah, clan of Quraysh 15, 50, 54
‘al-Zuhri, Ibn Sa‘d, see Ibn Sa‘d
‘al-Zuhri, Muhammad b. Shihāb 18, 28, 39, 47
Zuhur al-Shihr 157
Zumayl b. Qubāb al-Qaynī 43, 44
Zur‘ah bt. Mishrāh 190
Zurārāh b. ‘Amr 39
al-Zurqān 182, 183
Zuṭṭ 137